

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

SHAKESPEARE'S
SONNETS

EDITED BY
KATHERINE DUNCAN-JONES

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS
(THIRD)

ISBN 0-17-443474-X

9 780174 434740 >

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

THIRD SERIES

General Editors: Richard Proudfoot, Ann Thompson and David Scott Kastan

SHAKESPEARE'S
SONNETS

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL	edited by G. K. Hunter
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA	edited by John Wilders*
AS YOU LIKE IT	edited by Agnes Latham
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS	edited by R. A. Foakes
CORIOLANUS	edited by Philip Brockbank
CYMBELINE	edited by J. M. Nosworthy
HAMLET	edited by Harold Jenkins
JULIUS CAESAR	edited by T. S. Dorsch
KING HENRY IV Parts 1 and 2	edited by A. R. Humphreys
KING HENRY V	edited by T. W. Craik*
KING HENRY VI Parts 1, 2 and 3	edited by A. S. Cairncross
KING HENRY VIII	edited by R. A. Foakes
KING JOHN	edited by E. A. J. Honigmann
KING LEAR	edited by R. A. Foakes*
KING RICHARD II	edited by Peter Ure
KING RICHARD III	edited by Antony Hammond
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST	edited by Richard David
MACBETH	edited by Kenneth Muir
MEASURE FOR MEASURE	edited by J. W. Lever
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE	edited by John Russell Brown
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR	edited by H. J. Oliver
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM	edited by Harold F. Brooks
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING	edited by A. R. Humphreys
OTHELLO	edited by E. A. J. Honigmann*
PERICLES	edited by F. D. Hoeniger
THE POEMS	edited by F. T. Prince
ROMEO AND JULIET	edited by Brian Gibbons
SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS	edited by Katherine Duncan-Jones*
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW	edited by Brian Morris
THE TEMPEST	edited by Frank Kermode
TIMON OF ATHENS	edited by H. J. Oliver
TITUS ANDRONICUS	edited by Jonathan Bate*
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA	edited by Kenneth Palmer
TWELFTH NIGHT	edited by J. M. Lothian and T. W. Craik
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA	edited by Clifford Leech
THE TWO NOBLE KINSMEN	edited by Lois Potter*
THE WINTER'S TALE	edited by J. H. P. Pafford

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS

Edited by
KATHERINE DUNCAN-JONES

For my mother and my daughters

The general editors of the Arden Shakespeare have been
W.J. Craig and R.H. Case (first series 1899–1944)
Una Ellis-Fermor, Harold F. Brooks, Harold Jenkins and Brian Morris (second series 1946–82)

Present general editors (third series)
Richard Proudfoot, Ann Thompson and David Scott Kastan

This edition of Shakespeare's Sonnets, by Katherine Duncan-Jones first published 1997 by Thomas Nelson and Sons Ltd
Reprinted 1998

I[Ⓟ]P[®] Thomas Nelson is an International Thomson Publishing Company
I[Ⓟ]P[®] is used under licence

Editorial material © 1997 Katherine Duncan-Jones
Typeset in Ehrhardt by Multiplex Techniques Ltd
Printed in Italy

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reprinted or reproduced or utilized in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publishers.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication Data
A catalogue record has been applied for

ISBN 0–17–443474–X (hbk)
ISBN 0–17–443473–1 (pbk)

NPN 9 8 7 6 5 4 3

CONTENTS

List of illustrations	vii
General editors' preface	ix
Preface	xii
Introduction	1
Date	1
Publishing history	29
Context and allusion	45
Reception and criticism	69
Shakespeare's Sonnets	85
This edition	103
SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS	107
Sonnets	111
A Lover's Complaint	429
Appendix: Manuscript texts	453
Abbreviations and references
Abbreviations used in the notes	467
Works by and partly by Shakespeare	467
Editions of Shakespeare collated	469
Other works cited	469
Index	477
First line index	485

The Editor

Katherine Duncan-Jones has published well over forty articles on Elizabethan and Jacobean literature. Her biography Sir Philip Sidney: Courtier Poet appeared in 1991. She is a Tutorial Fellow in English at Somerville College, Oxford, and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature.

ILLUSTRATIONS

- 1 Michael Drayton's coat of arms beside Shakespeare's.
From BL MS Harley 6140, fol. 46^v 24
- 2 Triumphal arch with pyramids, 'The new Arabia felix', erected above the Cheapside conduit, March 1603/4.
From Stephen Harrison, The Arch's of Triumph (1604), sig. F
(Bodleian Gough London 145) 25
- 3 Simon van de Passe, engraved portrait of William Herbert,
Third Earl of Pembroke (1580–1630). From Henry Holland, Bazilologia: A Booke of Kings (1618), fol. 89^f (Bodleian 4^o Rawl. 170) 54
- 4 Dedication leaf of the 1609 Quarto (Bodleian Malone 34, title-page verso) 62
- 5 Dedication leaf of Ben Jonson's Volpone (1607) (Bodleian Malone 225[4]) 63
- 6 Drawings by George Steevens and Edmond Malone inscribed on the verso of the first flyleaf of *SHAKE-SPEARES
SONNETS* (1609). 76
- 7 Drawing by Max Beerbohm of 'William Shakespeare writing a sonnet' (1907) (courtesy of Mrs Reichmann) 81
- 8 Jane Lapotaire in the Channel 4 series of readings from Sonnets, 1983 (courtesy of Goldcrest Films) 84
- 9 Ben Kingsley in the Channel 4 series of readings from Sonnets, 1983 (courtesy of Goldcrest Films) 87
- 10 Opening of A Lover's Complaint in the 1609 Quarto
(Bodleian Malone 34, sigs K1^v–K2^r) 90

11	The Cheapside Hoard, a collection of Elizabethan jewels (Museum of London)	93
12	Page opening from the 1609 Quarto (Bodleian Malone 34, sigs H2 ^v –H3 ^r)	104
13	Title-page of the 1609 Quarto (Bodleian Malone 34)	107
14a	Early transcription of sonnet 128. From Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 152, fol. 34 ^r	458
14b	Transcription on same ms of William Browne, ‘Love’s Labyrinth’, and Sonnet II in Francis Davison’s A Poetical Rhapsody . From Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 152, fol. 34 ^v	459

GENERAL EDITORS' PREFACE

The Arden Shakespeare is now nearly one hundred years old. The earliest volume in the first series, Edward Dowden's Hamlet, was published in 1899. Since then the Arden Shakespeare has become internationally recognized and respected. It is now widely acknowledged as the pre-eminent Shakespeare series, valued by scholars, students, actors, and 'the great variety of readers' alike for its readable and reliable texts, its full annotation and its richly informative introductions.

We have aimed in the third Arden edition to maintain the quality and general character of its predecessors, preserving the commitment to presenting the work as it has been shaped in history. While each individual volume will necessarily have its own emphasis in the light of the unique possibilities and problems posed by the work, the edition as a whole, like the earlier Ardens, insists upon the highest standards of scholarship and upon attractive and accessible presentation.

Newly edited from the original quarto and folio editions, the texts are presented in fully modernized form, with a textual apparatus that records all substantial divergences from those early printings. The notes and introductions focus on the conditions and possibilities of meaning that editors and critics have discovered in the work. While building upon the rich history of scholarly activity that has long shaped our understanding of Shakespeare's texts, this third series of the Arden Shakespeare is made necessary and possible by a new generation's encounter with Shakespeare, engaging with the works and their complex relation to the culture in which they were – and continue to be – produced.

THE TEXT

On each page of the work itself, readers will find a passage of text supported by commentary and textual notes. In the text itself, unfamiliar typographic conventions have been avoided in order to minimize obstacles to the reader. Elided forms in the early texts are spelt out in full wherever they indicate a usual late-twentieth-century pronunciation that requires no special indication. Marks of elision are retained where they are necessary guides to the scansion and pronunciation of the line. Final -ed in past tense and participial forms of verbs is always printed as -ed, without accent, never as -'d, but wherever the required pronunciation diverges from modern usage a note in the commentary draws attention to the fact. Where the final -ed should be given syllabic value contrary to modern usage, e.g.

Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
(Son 36.10)

the note will take the form

10 bewailed bewailèd

COMMENTARY AND TEXTUAL NOTES

Notes in the commentary, for which a major source will be the Oxford English Dictionary, offer glossarial and other explication of verbal difficulties; they may also include discussion of points of interpretation and, in relevant cases, substantial extracts from Shakespeare's source material. Editors will not usually offer glossarial notes for words adequately defined in the Concise Oxford Dictionary or Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, but in cases of doubt they will include notes. Attention, however, will be drawn to places where more than one likely interpretation can be proposed and to significant verbal and syntactic complexity. Notes preceded by * involve discussion of textual variants or readings emended from the early edition(s) on which the text is based.

The textual notes are designed to let readers know when the edited text diverges from the early edition(s) on which it is based. Wherever this happens the note will record the rejected reading of the early edition(s), in original spelling, and the source of the reading adopted in this edition. Other forms from the early edition(s) recorded in these notes will include some spellings of particular interest or significance. The textual notes take a form that has been in use since the nineteenth century. This comprises, first: line reference, reading adopted in the text and closing square bracket; then: abbreviated reference, in italic, to the earliest edition to adopt the accepted reading, italic semicolon and noteworthy alternative reading(s), each with abbreviated italic reference to its source. Distinctive spellings of the basic text follow the square bracket without indication of source. Names enclosed in brackets indicate originators of conjectural emendations when these did not originate in an edition of the text, or when this edition records a conjecture not accepted into its text.

P R E F A C E

Pope's exclamation at the beginning of The Rape of the Lock, 'What mighty contests rise from trivial things', applies supremely to Shakespeare's Sonnets. Any and every detail of these poems may be the occasion of angry dispute, and many have been so, though I have tried not to get too much involved in such controversies. With reference to the text of individual sonnets, the minutest features of spelling, punctuation and format have momentous consequences for resonance and meaning. I have never felt more strongly than when working on this text the force of Oscar Wilde's account of a writer's hard labours: spending the whole morning putting in a comma, and the whole afternoon taking it out. In the belief not only that such matters are immensely important, but also that the 1609 Quarto printing reflects the minutiae, as well as the substance, of a copy manuscript certainly authorized, and perhaps also penned, by Shakespeare himself, I have attempted to represent the details of this text as faithfully as the requirements of modernization will allow. This is, for instance, the first edited text of Sonnets to include the two pairs of empty parentheses which follow the six-couplet poem numbered 126. While previous editors have suggested that these were inserted by the printers, who noticed that the poem was composed only of twelve lines, not fourteen, I think this an unlikely intervention. We know that George Eld's compositors were accustomed to working for such meticulously niggling writers as Ben Jonson, and a detailed analysis of their 1607–8 publications by Peter Murray suggests that they habitually reproduced the characteristic spelling forms they encountered, rather than imposing 'house style'.¹

1 Murray, passim.

Contextually, also, matters which may not seem immediately of vital interest or importance here are so. Paramount is the question of date. The weight of tradition has favoured an early date, placing Sonnets close in time to the two narrative poems, in 1593–4, and bracketing all three non-dramatic works together as probably connected with the patronage of the young Henry Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton. Biographically, for many Victorian and Edwardian critics, this dating made it possible to sideline Sonnets as an uncharacteristic, and perhaps in some respects compromising or even disgraceful, product of Shakespeare's youth. The writing of them could be seen as a brilliant but embarrassing folly which he left behind him as his career as a dramatist developed, rather as he had left behind him his (supposed) early exploits as a poacher of Sir Thomas Lucy's deer. In the present edition it is proposed that, on the contrary, though we may never discover how early some individual sonnets or versions of sonnets were composed, there is good reason to believe that the whole sequence as published in 1609 was put into its final shape after 1603, and possibly quite close to its printing. It is for this reason that so much space is given, in the Introduction, to the issue of dating, for the evidence and arguments presented here represent a radical departure from previous study. And as for the compromising or 'disgraceful' elements of the sonnets: their homoeroticism is here confronted positively, and is newly contextualized within the powerfully 'homosocial' world of James I's court. The case for their association with Southampton largely collapses, but the case for their connection with William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, becomes newly plausible. The 'Pembrokian' hypothesis is re-examined, with the citation of some new supportive evidence. As a whole, the sequence can be seen, not as a youthful folly, but as the mature and considered work of a successful professional writer.

Some of what is done here was anticipated in John Kerrigan's excellent Penguin edition (1986). For instance, he too included A Lover's Complaint, and argued for its place as a structural component of the published sequence. However, there appears still to be strong resistance to this poem, which is rarely included in discussion of Sonnets, or, indeed, of any of Shakespeare's work. The decision of the New Cambridge editors to place A Lover's Complaint with the narrative poems, and to exclude it altogether from Blakemore Evans's 1996 edition of Sonnets, suggests that the case for its authenticity and integrity needs to be reaffirmed. It is for this reason that its formal and thematic place in the sequence is discussed in some detail in the penultimate section of the Introduction. A matter which Kerrigan did not address is the form of the sequence's title, Shakespeare's Sonnets. Though some other editors, most notably Stephen Booth, have used this form of title, its authority and meaning have never before been fully examined.

Because so much of the contextualization of Shakespeare's Sonnets here is essentially new, priority has been given to matters of date and context, rather than to a full chronicle of the work's critical history. But if the present text commands acceptance, there will be much fresh work for critics to do in the next millennium, as they come to terms with the exciting complexities of this extraordinary work of the Jacobean Shakespeare.

In preparing this edition, my first debt is to previous editors of Shakespeare's Sonnets, and above all to the great Edmond Malone, whose 1780 edition was the first to take this text seriously and to undo the harm done to it by the publisher John Benson in 1640. H.E. Rollins's wonderfully encyclopaedic two-volume variorum has been my daily resource for more than three years. I have also derived much illumination from Ingram and Redpath and from Stephen Booth. John Kerrigan's 1986 Penguin edition is so close in time, and so excellent in its subtlety and scholarship, that I have avoided consulting it as often as I would have liked, for fear of relying on it excessively. Several people have helped me by perusing sugared sections of the notes or the Introduction or both. First and foremost among these private friends is my mother, Mrs E.E. Duncan-Jones; others include Dr Henry Woudhuysen, Professor Steve May and Dr Julia Griffin. Constant and generous communications on the vexed matter of dating from Professor Kent Hieatt have ensured that I could never succumb to the temptation to shelve it. I have also derived enormous help and inspiration from glimpses of Professor Helen Vendler's work in progress, and from a conversation with her in Los Angeles, during which among other things she showed me how to deal with those 'rebel powers' in sonnet 146. Kevin Billington lent me videos of the readings from Shakespeare's Sonnets made for Channel Four under his direction in 1983: if the 'performance history' of these non-dramatic texts ever comes to be written, these deserve pride of place. Others who have given me specialist help include John Carey, Jeremy Catto, Martin Dodsworth, Barbara Harvey, Ernst Honigmann, John Kerrigan, Don McKenzie, Paul Morgan, Jan Piggott, Judith Priestman, Christopher Ricks, Geraldo de Sousa, Fiona Stafford, Brian Vickers, George Walton Williams, Michael Webb, Bee Wilson and Emily Wilson. Grysina Cooper, at the Centre for Computing in the Humanities, has twice come to my rescue at moments of electronic collapse compounded by human fallibility. Libraries and archives where I have worked happily include, in addition to my regular haunt, the Bodleian Library in Oxford, the British Library, the Public Record Office, the Stratford Records Office, the Shakespeare Institute, Westminster Abbey, the Henry E. Huntington Library, Trinity College, Cambridge, Dulwich College Library and Balliol College, Oxford. At the stage of near-completion this text benefited enormously from the keen eyes and diverse perceptions of Richard Proudfoot and Ann Thompson, and at a later stage still from the meticulous scrutiny of the copy-editor, Roger Fallon. My own stubbornness should be blamed for those errors and deficiencies that survive their labours. I owe my college, Somerville, grateful thanks for support and friendship, and in particular for a term of sabbatical leave in the spring of 1996. Many Somerville students over the years have opened my eyes to readings I hadn't thought of – so many that it would be invidious even to attempt to record all their names.

Katherine Duncan-Jones
Oxford

INTRODUCTION

DATE

External evidence

The public story of Shakespeare's Sonnets began late in 1598, with Francis Meres's mouthwatering account in Palladis Tamia (which had been entered in the Stationers' Register on 7th September):

As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras:
so the sweete wittie soule of Ouid liues in mellifluous & hony-tongued Shakespeare, witnes his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred Sonnets among his private friends, &c.¹

For enthusiastic book-buyers, it might appear that in the following year, 1599, it had become possible to join the fortunate ranks of Shakespeare's 'private friends', for William Jaggard published a small octavo volume called THE PASSIONATE PILGRIME. By W. Shakespeare, to which were appended six further lyrics introduced by a separate title-page, SONNETS. To sundry notes of Musicke. Only the three sonnets which open The Passionate Pilgrim, and one further sonnet and lyric, can be confidently claimed as Shakespeare's. The two opening poems were later to appear in the 1609 Quarto (Q) as sonnets 138 and 144, and the other three were taken from the 1598 Quarto of Love's Labour's Lost. However, most early readers must quite naturally have assumed that all twenty poems in The Passionate Pilgrim (PP) were Shakespeare's, and that they corresponded with the sonnets to which Meres referred. Evidently the little volume sold well, for two editions seem to have been published in close succession, the first surviving only as a fragment.¹ But for discerning readers of contemporary poetry, many of whom, like Francis Meres and John Weever,² must have also been admirers of Shakespeare's plays, The Passionate Pilgrim was surely disappointing, in both quality and quantity. Such readers may naturally have concluded that Meres had over-praised Shakespeare's 'sugred Sonnets', which were not, after all, such delicate sweetmeats. Slight, quirky, occasionally sententious and frequently obscene, Jaggard's miscellany did the fast-rising playwright no great credit. Indeed, PP 2 and 9 (one an authentic Shakespeare poem, the other probably not), with their unattractive allusions to the female genitalia either as 'hell' or as a 'wound', might have caused readers alert to such nuance to wonder whether Meres's '&c.' concealed another such allusion,³ and characterized Shakespeare – who was, according to Meres, a reanimated Ovid – as a writer who specialized in making ingeniously unpleasant allusions to that part of the body.

1 Francis Meres, Palladis Tamia. Wits Treasury. Being the Second Part of Wits Commonwealth (1598), fols 281^v-2^r.

According to the later testimony of Thomas Heywood, Shakespeare had been 'much offended' with William Jaggard, 'that altogether unknowne to him presumed to make so bold with his name'⁴. In 1612 Jaggard had compounded his offence by bringing out a third edition of The Passionate Pilgrim, which was now plumped out with the addition of two epistles and other material from Thomas Heywood's Troia Britannica (1608). It was this which provoked Heywood's public remonstrance in An Apology for Actors. Heywood was evidently afraid that Shakespeare might blame him for this latest piracy and misattribution, since Jaggard had been his publisher for the authorized Troia Britannica, and was stung into making a public attack on Jaggard by the need to clear his own name. It should not be assumed, simply because there is little documentary evidence

1 Cf. TxC, 455.

2 John Weever, Epigrammes (1599) sig. E6'.

3 Cf. RJ (First Quarto) 2.1.37–8, 'O that she were / An open Et Cetera'; 2H4 2.4.181, 'And are etceteras nothings?'; Partridge, Bawdy, 109.

4 Thomas Heywood, An Apology for Actors (1612), sig. G4.

close in time to their publication, that Shakespeare did not care about the two 1599 publications of The Passionate Pilgrim. Heywood, one of the earliest admirers and closest imitators of Shakespeare's first published poem, Venus and Adonis,¹ was most likely well placed to know for certain both that Shakespeare had been angry with Jaggard in 1599, and that he was even more so when he repeated the offence in 1612. Jaggard's 1612 piracy was all the more brazen in its audacity because, as Heywood said, 'he [Shakespeare] since, to do himself right, hath published them in his own name'. That is, in 1609 Shakespeare had assumed control of his own text of his Sonnets, by selling the collection to Thorpe and giving it the title Shakespeare's Sonnets. Judging by the extreme scarcity of surviving copies of The Passionate Pilgrim, Jaggard's little venture had done vexingly well, and it may have seemed for the time being to have spoiled the market for authentic 'sugred Sonnets' by Shakespeare. Indeed, it probably contributed importantly to the eleven-year gap between Meres's succulent reference in 1598 and the eventual publication of Q in 1609 – although, as I shall argue in more detail, the 1609 sonnets may correspond only partially with those 'sugred' ones referred to by Meres.

One piece of evidence has been oddly neglected. It may be that Shakespeare in fact took immediate measures to put right the wrong done to him by Jaggard in 1599, if we suppose that he is the 'W.S.' in the following Stationers' Register entry for 3 January 1599/1600:

Eleazar Edgar. Entred for his cotype under the handes of the Wardens.

A booke called Amours by J.D. with certain other sonnetes by W.S.

As H.E. Rollins records, Sir Sidney Lee did not believe that this 'W.S.' could possibly be Shakespeare. Lee argued, with characteristic

1 Duncan-Jones, 'Red and white', 495–7.

vehemence but without any evidence, for William Smith. J.Q. Adams, on the other hand, felt that this 'W.S.' could perfectly well be our man. Fence-sitting, Rollins asked 'Who shall decide, when doctors disagree?'¹ However, it seems to be Lee's dismissal that has held the field in the later twentieth century. Schoenbaum, for instance, failed even to include this entry among surviving documents possibly referring to Shakespeare. Yet it does seem perfectly believable both that Shakespeare may have prepared a collection of his sonnets late in 1599, provoked by Jaggard's piratical and mediocre Passionate Pilgrim, and that at one time he planned to publish it. His collaborator in the enterprise could have been John Davies (later 'Sir'), John Davies of Hereford, John Dickenson, John Donne (most excitingly) – or some other J.D. If he was acting in conjunction with Sir John Davies, the volume might have been connected in some way with the somewhat mysterious ?1599 publication EPIGRAMMES and ELEGIES. By I.D. and C.M., which consisted of the dead Marlowe's translation of Ovid's Elegies accompanied by Sir John Davies's Epigrams. A connection with Davies is suggested by the Huntington Library copy of The Passionate Pilgrim, which is bound up, in an apparently contemporary vellum binding, both with the 1599 octavo Venus and Adonis and with Davies's Epigrammes. The Epigrammes excited official disapproval, being included among other scurrilous and libellous works ordered to be burned, by order of the Bishop of London, in June 1599.² If the 'J.D.' of 'Amours' was Sir John Davies, he could well have decided not to jeopardize his reputation with further print publication of his own epigrams, but to limit his poems, such as the 'cobwebb of my invention' which he seems to have composed for Robert Cecil in January 1599/1600,³ to manuscript circulation within a coterie. In that case, the title 'Amours' would refer most readily to Ovid's Amores, suggesting a renewed attempt by Davies to get Marlowe's translations into print, this time with a perhaps less controversial accompaniment. Given the number of publications of popular works that have disappeared altogether in this period, there is even a remote possibility that J.D.'s 'Amours' along with W.S.'s 'sonnetes' actually did reach print, but has left no surviving exemplars. If this were the case, and the author of the sonnets Shakespeare, the title-page description of Shakespeare's Sonnets in Q as 'Neuer before Imprinted' might serve to assert the independence of (most of?) this sequence from the J.D./W.S. collection, as well as from The Passionate Pilgrim. Eleazar Edgar, who entered the double work in the Register, emerged in the early Jacobean period as an up-market bookseller and publisher, whose earliest recorded publications were editions of the newly acceded monarch's Daemonologie and The True Lawe of Free Monarchies (STC, 14365, 14410). Other publications by Edgar indicate connections with the theatre. They include Dekker's The Double PP (1605); Marston's Sophonisba: The Wonder of Women (1606); Francis Beaumont's The Woman Hater (1607); Middleton's A Mad World My Masters (1608); and Cyril Tourneur's A Funerall Poem . . . Upon Sir Francis Vere (1609). The 1600 Stationers' Register entry offers at least a possibility that Shakespeare prepared some sonnets for publication early in 1600, motivated by a desire to put right Jaggard's damaging misappropriation and misidentification of his work. There may or may not have been a serious intention to publish. The 'staying entry' of 'as you lyke yt / a booke' on 4 August of the same year may be analogous. The chief purpose of the entry in the Register of 'sonnetes by W.S.' could have been to prohibit further piracy by Jaggard. Indeed, the fact that twelve years elapsed between the two profitable PP printings of 1599 and Jaggard's expanded edition of 1612 offers some evidence that Jaggard was indeed in some way restrained during the intervening years, and obliquely supports the identification of this 'W.S.' with Shakespeare.

1 Rollins, 2.55

2 Millar MacLure in Marlowe, Poems, xxxi–xxxii; Robert Krueger in Davies, 379.

3 Krueger in Davies, xxxviii; BL MS Lansdowne 88, fol. 4^r.

If the 'certain other sonnetes by W.S.' entered for publication in January 1600 are taken to be Shakespeare's, it is possible to speculate a little further on which particular sonnets these may have been. Of course, they could have been poems of which we have no knowledge because they never saw the light. But if the publication, or staying entry, was intended above all to set right the wrong done by Jaggard, it seems a fair presumption that the collection included 'When my love swears that she is made of truth' (PP 1; Son 138) and 'Two loves I have, of comfort and despair' (PP 2; Son 144), the two authentic sonnets with which The Passionate Pilgrim opened. Both poems, but especially the second, seem to call for a fuller poetic and narrative context in which the speaker's treacherous lust and triangular passion are more fully analysed. It is unlikely that the group included the Love's Labour's Lost poems, since these had already seen print in the 1598 Quarto of the play, and presumably also in the lost 'Bad' Quarto in 1597. Perhaps, then, these 'certain other sonnetes' included or comprised the 'dark lady' sequence, later to appear as Sonnets 127–54: a sequence of twenty-eight darkly satirical heterosexual poems whose moral and artistic instability seems to reflect a male disgust with the lunar, menstrual, cycle alluded to in their number. Labelling this group of sonnets, unpoetically, 'Zone 4', Kent Hiatt and his collaborators have found in it 'a high proportion of early rare words', and 'no late ones'.¹ Both external and internal evidence suggest that this sequence may have corresponded with the 'sugred Sonnets' referred to by Meres, and that it was essentially complete in 1599, undergoing no more than a little stylistic tinkering before publication in 1609. The other part of the sequence most probably belonging to a period before 1600 is the opening 1–17, but the arguments for this belong to a later section.

There is no dispute about the volume to which the Stationers' Register entry of 20 May 1609 refers –

1 Hiatt, 'When?', 91.

20 May

Tho. Thorpe. Entred for his copie under the handes of master Wilson and master Lownes Wardenes a booke called Shakespeares sonnettes vjd.¹

Not only is Shakespeare's surname here given in full; the title corresponds with that on the title-page of Q, 'SHAKESPEARES SONNETS'. Exactly when in 1609 the volume was published cannot be established, because of the resounding silence into which it fell. A note on the back of a letter to Edward Alleyn, dated 19 June [1609], records under the heading 'Howshold stuff' the purchase of 'a book. Shaksper sonetts 5d'². But this is almost certainly a forgery by John Payne Collier, inserted by him in a convenient space on an authentic document, as was his habitual practice.³ Collier himself never published this reference, and Rollins records it as Alleyn's,⁴ but it is nevertheless highly suspect.

'Howshold stuff' would be a curious heading under which to record the purchase of such a book, and it is a phrase rather suspiciously corresponding with The Taming of the Shrew, Induction.2.140.⁵ In his account books Alleyn frequently refers to expenditure under the heading 'Howshold' or 'Howshold charges', but not, elsewhere, 'Howshold stuff'⁶ – and to write out such a heading for a single fivepenny purchase would be rather odd. Some of the letter forms, especially 's' and 'k', differ somewhat from those in the other accounts written above. Collier and his assistant Peter Cunningham were accomplished and intelligent forgers and fabricators, and seem here to have provided after-comers with what would, if authentic, be most

1 Reproduced in Schoenbaum, Records, 219.

2 Reproduced in Henslowe Papers, vol. 2, item 12.

3 See Race's article in N&Q; note also the succession of further studies of Collier's activities by the same scholar in the same journal.

4 Rollins, 2.54.

5 See Race.

6 Cf. Dulwich College Alleyn Papers MS VIII (1594–1616) and IX (1617–22).

precious: testimony to the precise date of publication of Q, the price at which it was sold, and its eager acquisition by one of Shakespeare's theatrical associates. Sadly, however, it cannot be trusted, and if this document is discounted, we are left with little evidence of the price at which it was sold, though an early owner of the Huntington (formerly Steevens) copy has written on the title-page 'pretium – 1^s – N: L: S:'. If a shilling was indeed the original selling price, this was a rather expensive quarto. The survival of thirteen copies, most in good condition, suggests that the volume did not undergo the kind of enthusiastic thumbing that destroyed hundreds of early copies of Shakespeare's earliest published poem, Venus and Adonis. Also, whereas Venus and Adonis went through at least sixteen editions in Shakespeare's lifetime, Shakespeare's Sonnets was not reprinted even once – and this despite the fame of the Jacobean Shakespeare. We might also compare the fate of another 1609 publication, Troilus and Cressida, whose quarto was printed early in the year, and of which only four copies survive. Assuming that the size of the print-runs was the same, the evidence of survival-rates suggests that Troilus and Cressida was three times as popular among readers as Shakespeare's Sonnets.

The reason for the popularity of Troilus and Cressida, along with the numerous other play texts published in 1608–10, may lie in a further area of external evidence that provides an important context for the dating of Shakespeare's Sonnets. This is the incidence of plague outbreaks, which has been surprisingly neglected by previous scholars. Both of Shakespeare's narrative poems, Venus and Adonis, 1593, and Lucrece, 1594, had been published during plague outbreaks which were severe enough to cause civic orders for the public theatres to be closed. A consequent loss of income, and a decision to turn, instead, to print publication, looking to a reward from a courtly patron, readily explains the place of these two poems in the chronology of Shakespeare's works. By the period of Jaggard's Passionate Pilgrim Shakespeare's economic dependence on, and investment in, the public theatre was very much greater, following his membership of the Globe Theatre syndicate set up in February 1599.¹ If Jaggard's piracy detracted from the value of those highly praised 'sugred Sonnets' that were, perhaps, being saved up against a plague-ridden day, it is not surprising that Shakespeare was angry with him. By 1609, when Shakespeare's Sonnets finally saw the light, his investment in the theatre was greater still, after the King's Men's acquisition of the Blackfriars building in August 1608.² Notoriously, the death of Elizabeth and the peaceful accession of James I in March 1603 heralded an exceptionally severe and prolonged plague outbreak, which caused those theatres under civic control to be closed for nearly thirteen months, from May 1603 to September 1604, with only short intermissions.³ Thomas Dekker's The Wonderfull Year. 1603 celebrated the curious concatenation of James's peaceful accession and his arrival in London with the onset of the worst plague outbreak in living memory. For Shakespeare's company, too, this 'wonderful' year – both splendid and terrifying – was to be greeted

With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole.

(Ham 1.2.12–13)

On the one hand, they were swiftly elevated to the status of 'King's servants' (on 17 May 1603), and the King offered them some economic and artistic protection from the consequences of the plague orders, both through cash gifts and through requests for private performances at Hampton Court and elsewhere. But on the other hand, the Globe stood bleakly empty, and as Barroll points out, this above all was 'where the big money was to be made'⁴. Since the epidemic was also widespread outside London,

1 Schoenbaum, Life, 154–5.

2 Ibid., 213–16.

3 Barroll, 173, 99–115.

4 Barroll, 115.

a provincial tour was not the solution. During this phase of theatre closure it seems probable that Shakespeare turned once more to his sonnets, revising poems he had already written, and expanding and redesigning his sequence in a manner which suited the new culture heralded by the new reign. Recent stylometric studies (discussed below) point to 1603–4 as a plausible time for the composition or completion of most of the ‘fair youth’ sonnets after 1–17, as well as A Lover’s Complaint, despite the fact that neither sonnet sequences nor love complaints were conspicuously fashionable genres by this date.¹ But as I shall suggest later, both are radical refashionings of genre. Perhaps it was only because of the fitful suspension of closure orders during August and September 1604, followed by six months during which the theatres were open, that a version of the Sonnets did not see print in that year.

As Barroll has shown, London’s public theatres were paralysed once again by closure orders from July 1606 onwards. Apart from a brief interlude of playing during the summer of 1606, ‘plague continued off and on for three years, until December 1610’². Yet again, Thomas Dekker was quick to chronicle the effects of this prolonged epidemic on the City of London, first in The Dead Tearme, 1608, and then in The Ravens Almanacke, published early in 1609, in which he prophesied further plagues to descend on sinful Londoners during that year. In the opening passage of Worke for Armorours, 1609, written in ‘this present Summer’, he specifically described the effect of plague on playwrights, actors and poets:

Play-houses, stand (like Tavernes that have cast out their Maisters) the doores locked up, the Flagges (like their Bushes) taken down, or rather like Houses lately infected, from whence the affrighted dwellers are fled, in hope to live better in the Country. The Players themselves did

1 Cf. Nosworthy; Heiatt, ‘When?’; Jackson ‘Complaint’.

2 Barroll, 174.

never worke till now, there Comedies are all turned to Tragedies, there Tragedies to Nocturnals, and the best of them all are weary of playing in those Nocturnal Tragedies. Proh Dolor! their Muses are more sullen then old Monkeys: now that mony is not stirring . . . O Pittifull Poetry, what a lamentable prentiship hast thou served, and (which is the greatest spite) canst not yet be made *Free!*¹

For some reason the authorities still permitted bear- and bull-baiting: as Dekker went on to say, 'The company of Beares hold together still, they play their Tragi-Comedies as lively as ever they did'. So Edward Alleyn, as Master of the Bear Garden, was still in business, and would theoretically have been in a position to buy a copy of Shakespeare's Sonnets from one of its two London book-sellers, had he so wished. Not many others of his class and economic status remained in London that summer. By the end of May 1609, when Q was entered in the Stationers' Register, plague deaths had reached an alarmingly high level. In some weeks of April and May deaths from plague in the City of London approached a hundred a week, and it was feared that the total might rise even further, though in fact this was to be its peak. As soon as the Easter Law Term ended the City was swiftly deserted by the professional classes, gentry and courtiers, whose business for the time being was done.² 'Shakespeares sonnettes' was entered in the Register a few days before Ascension Day, which marked the end of the Easter Law Term.³ Perhaps something of a last-minute rush attended Shakespeare's sale of the copy manuscript to Thorpe. He may well have been anxious to complete the transaction as quickly as possible before retreating from plague-ridden London for the summer, presumably to Stratford, where there was other business to be dealt with. The hasty departure of the author,

1 Thomas Dekker, Worke for Armourours (1609), sig. B1'.

2 Wilson, 120-1; Barroll, 180-1. John Bell, Londons Rembrancer (1665), gives weekly figures for plague deaths in the City from 1606-10.

3 Cf. Cheney, 68-9; and Table 16, showing years, including 1609, when Easter Day was on 16 April.

rather than any kind of conspiracy, most probably accounts for Thorpe's being the signatory of the dedication.

Shakespeare seems not to have been in Stratford since the death of his widowed mother the previous September. His considerable holdings in tithe income, land and commodities all needed to be seen to, and there was at least one outstanding piece of litigation in Warwickshire. This was his recovery of a debt of £6, with 24s interest, from John Addenbrooke, which was concluded at the Stratford Court of Record on 7 June 1609.¹ The description of Shakespeare as 'nuper in curia domini Jacobi' ('recently at the Court of King James') could suggest that he had lately arrived back in Stratford, and now enjoyed an elevated status in his home town as a 'King's servant',² who frequently performed at court. As E.A.J. Honigmann has shown, this was 'a particularly busy period of Shakespeare's career, when he accepted new responsibilities in London, but also had to take hold of the reins in Stratford, and was detained there against his will'³. Such a sequence of events would help to account for the mediocre printing of the text and the apparent absence of authorial proof-correction. Indeed, this may have been a repetition of an old pattern, for both Venus and Adonis and Lucrece had been entered in the Register in late spring, during plague outbreaks, after which summer journeys to Stratford are probable. Neither seems to have been authorially press-corrected.⁴

External evidence, in conclusion, suggests four probable phases of composition, of which the second and third are highly conjectural.

1 Schoenbaum, Life, 183, 192.

2 For the documents relating to the Addenbrooke case, see Chambers, Shakespeare, 2.114–16. Curiously, the Addenbrooke affair, for which seven documents survive, is not discussed at all in Bearman, rating only a passing reference on p. 31. Schoenbaum, too, describes it as 'leaving a trail of records more numerous than interesting'. (Life, 184).

3 Honigmann, 45.

4 Plague may also account for the uniquely bad state of Jonson's The Case is Altered, also belonging to the summer of 1609. After intervening to correct the title-page, Jonson, too, may have left London, either for the country residence of Sir Robert Cotton or for that of one of his aristocratic patrons (cf. Jonson, 3.96).

(1) ?–1598. Some sonnets, at least, must have been written by the time of Meres's allusion in Palladis Tamia. Though it is theoretically possible that none of the 'sugred Sonnets' referred to by Meres correspond with those eventually published in 1609, it is rather unlikely, in view of the appearance of 138 and 144 in The Passionate Pilgrim. Some would also argue that the circulation from 1620 or so of manuscript texts of sonnet 2 may derive from an earlier version.¹

(2) 1599–1600. In the aftermath of The Passionate Pilgrim Shakespeare may have prepared a collection of sonnets which was entered in the Stationers' Register on 3 January 1600. Even if this was merely a 'staying entry', not denoting any firm intention to publish, the Wardens of the Stationers' Company would need to see and verify the manuscript.

(3) 1603–4. Severe plague outbreak and consequent loss of income from the theatre make this a plausible time for Shakespeare to have turned once more to non-dramatic poetry. A Lover's Complaint and some of the 'dating' sonnets, such as 107 and 125, appear to belong to this time, which may have been the period in which the sequence began to take its final shape.

(4) August 1608 – May 1609. An even more severe and prolonged plague outbreak again deprived Shakespeare of income from the theatre. He may have finished work on Shakespeare's Sonnets during this period before selling the manuscript to Thorpe.

Internal evidence: the likelihood of revision

Before I examine the two traditional areas of internal evidence for the date of Shakespeare's sonnets, style and topical allusions, something should be said about the general characteristics of sonnets and sonnet sequences in Shakespeare's period. It is fairly obvious that the sonnet, an almost uniquely contained, delimited form of versification, is peculiarly susceptible to tinkering. It does not take long to copy out a single sonnet, and in copying it out, whether for a 'private friend' or for other purposes, a poet of a self-critical bent, or one who is sensitive to criticism or changing circumstances, is extremely likely to introduce changes, whether of single words or of whole lines or quatrains. A sonnet sequence, still more, is almost bound to be the product of several second thoughts and rearrangements. It is remarkably easy to reorder sonnets, either, as Robert Sidney did in his poetical manuscript, by inscribing different numbers or directions, such as 'This should be first', beside them;¹ or, if individual sonnets or small groups are written on loose sheets of paper, by reshuffling them like a pack of cards. Those sixteenth-century sonneteers who published sonnet sequences, and became involved in later printings, seem almost always to have revised. Where manuscript evidence survives, that, too, generally points to revision. The pre-eminent sonneteer of Renaissance France, for instance, Pierre de Ronsard, transformed his 1578 Sonnets pour Hélène into what was in effect 'a new sonnet cycle' in the augmented and revised edition of 1584.² Likewise, the earliest English 'sonneteer', Thomas Watson, produced one version of Hekatompathia in manuscript for personal presentation to his patron, the Earl of Oxford, and another, longer, annotated one for print publication a year or so later.³ Fulke Greville revised his sequence Caelica several times, over a period of years, at one time shortening it, and at another reinstating previously rejected sonnets, as the Warwick Castle manuscript shows.⁴

1 Taylor, 'Some MSS'; Kerrigan, 441ff. For a discussion of this claim, see Appendix, pp. 453–7.

The most extreme example of repeated revision of a sonnet sequence is offered by Shakespeare's Warwickshire neighbour Michael Drayton. Out of the early Ideas Mirrour, 1594, Drayton eventually generated the final version of Idea, 1619, through the process of at least five revisions. Only twenty of the original

1 BL MS Add. 58435 Robert Sidney, Poems 124 and passim.

2 Stone, 228–43.

3 BL MS Harley 3277; Thomas Watson, Hekatompathia (1582).

4 Cf. Farmer.

fifty-three sonnets included in Ideas Mirrour survived in the 1619 sequence. As well as writing new sonnets, Drayton made continual verbal and stylistic changes to old ones. He was notoriously sensitive to mockery, such as that of Sir John Davies in his 'Gullinge Sonnets',¹ or Marston in his Scourge of Villanie; and he was anxious to adjust his poems to the changing requirements of fashion. Indeed, Shakespeare may allude defensively to Drayton's celebrated versatility in his own sonnet 76, opening with the question:

Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
So far from variation or quick change?

In the course of a quarter of a century Drayton transformed a sequence of soft, 'golden', conventionally self-pitying love sonnets into something much more tough, colloquial and unpredictable – as he himself boasted, 'in all Humors sportively I range'². His later-written, Jacobean sonnets, from the 1605 version onwards, include strong elements of satire and misogyny. As Kathleen Tillotson put it, writing of the 'sternness and finality' of these poems, 'They are the sonnets of a satirist; even the traditional promise of immortality must open with a jeer at the "paltry, foolish, painted things".'³ Daniel, too, was a compulsive reviser of his own sonnets, though not on the same grand scale as Drayton. His Delia went through at least eleven editions from the original Delia and Rosamund in 1592 to the text included in his Whole Workes in 1623, with verbal changes, additions, and some rearrangement, but mostly confined to the period 1601–2.

With so much evidence available that other, better-documented sonneteers continually rewrote and reordered their work, it becomes a near-certainty that Shakespeare must have done so too, given that at least a decade elapsed between the

1 Davies, 163–7.

2 Drayton, 2.310.

3 Drayton, 5.139. For a detailed analysis of Drayton's revisions, see Drayton, 5.137–44; note also the useful 'Finding-List' on pp. 326–8.

'sugred Sonnets' alluded to by Meres and the eventual emergence of Q. Whatever the order of their original composition may have been, it is most unlikely that it bears much relation to the order of the sonnets as finally arranged in Q, although some scholars, strangely, have assumed that Shakespeare did begin to write at 1 and simply carried straight through to 154.¹ Numerological finesses, such as the play, on the human body in 20, on '[h]our minutes' in 60, the grand climacteric in 63, and a double climacteric in 126, suggest either that sonnets already written were subsequently carefully located, or that some were specially written or revised for particular positions in the sequence. (For discussion of individual examples, see commentary.) Any individual sonnet, unless topical allusion can be shown to peg it to a particular date, may have undergone revision over a period of days, weeks, years or decades. Indeed, even an apparently topical sonnet, such as 107, may, for all we know, be the product of revision, incorporating or adapting topical elements in a sonnet written earlier.

Drayton, as Kathleen Tillotson has shown,² was still labouring to impose logic and forcefulness on the 'vague conceits' of his early sonnets nearly thirty years later. If the only version of his sequence that survived were the 1619 one, some of Drayton's sonnets would doubtless pose just the sort of stylistic puzzles that some of Shakespeare's do, with perplexing occurrences of both 'early rare words' and 'late rare words'.³ The fact that scholars attempting to date Shakespeare's Sonnets on stylistic evidence have ranged from as early as 1582 to as late as 1609⁴ may not simply reflect the well-known capacity of these poems to provoke extreme disagreement. It may also testify to the genuinely multi-layered character of the sonnets, some of which may have been worked over and tinkered with on different

1 This assumption mars Graziani's otherwise excellent article.

2 Drayton, 5.139.

3 Cf. Heiatt, 'When?', 96-7.

4 Rollins, 2.53-77.

occasions at widely spaced intervals. Though Heminge and Condell could not recall finding many blots in the autograph texts of Shakespeare's plays, it is unlikely that his working papers for Sonnets were so immaculate.

Internal evidence: style

The pursuit of individual stylistic or verbal links between Sonnets and Shakespeare's other works leads in many directions. Even a trail which at first looks straightforward can quickly prove to lead into a thorny wood. This can be illustrated with reference to one example which apparently points to an early date, and another which seems strongly to suggest a late one. To start with the 'early' one: the only line in Shakespeare's Sonnets that is an exact quotation, 'Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds' (94.14), derives from The Reign of King Edward the Third. This play was printed in 1596, but may have been written as early as 1591, for the short-lived company of Pembroke's Men.¹ Whether or not Shakespeare had a hand in the writing of the play, as many have thought, there is no doubt that he was very familiar with it, and echoed parts of its action in Henry V and Measure for Measure.² This being so, his quotation of an aphoristic line from it can scarcely be taken as reliable evidence that sonnet 94 was written close in time to the period of the composition, performance or publication of Edward the Third, 1591–6, since he evidently went on remembering and thinking about the play in the Jacobean period. Indeed, for all we know, Shakespeare may have quoted the line in the expectation that it would be recognized by readers of the second edition of Edward the Third in 1599, and/or it may have been in this second edition that he himself read the play with closest attention.

The quotation may also be evidence against Shakespeare's authorship of the play, rather than in favour of it, since, as Lee maintained forcefully, 'It was contrary to Shakespeare's practice literally to plagiarize himself.’¹ One of Shakespeare’s few other exact quotations, again a single aphoristic verse line, ‘Who ever loved, that loved not at first sight?’ (AYL 3.5.82), was included as an acknowledged tribute to its author, the ‘dead shepherd’ Marlowe, who had been murdered six or seven years before As You Like It was written. On this analogy, it cannot be safely assumed that close verbal reminiscence necessarily implies proximity in time to the work recalled, whether a work by Shakespeare himself or another writer.

1 Cf. Proudfoot, 181–2.

2 Cf. Muir, chs 2–3.

Looking to the other end of the chronological spectrum, Kent Hicatt has suggested cogently that A Lover’s Complaint is strongly linked with one of the ‘last plays’, Cymbeline, with reference to the occurrence of fifteen ‘very rare words’ in both works.² He also points out that the first quatrain of sonnet 73, ‘That time of year thou mayst in me behold’, with its ‘bough–leaves–shake–bear complex’, is closely analogous both to a passage in another mature play, Timon of Athens (4.3.265–8), and, even more, to a speech by Belarius in Cymbeline (3.3.60–4):

then was I as a tree
Whose boughs did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A storm, or robbery (call it what you will)
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

In combination with the presentation of the speaker, in all three passages, as a visibly old and dying man, the parallels with Timon and Cymbeline might appear to point to sonnet 73 as written close in time to the two plays. Indeed, a period between 1603 and 1609 is what I would personally favour. But again, it is only honest to acknowledge that Shakespeare’s verbal and metaphoric memory was both acute and retentive. Writing speeches for traumatized old men in Timon and Cymbeline could have caused him to recall words and images he had deployed in a sonnet some years earlier. And as suggested above, we can never be certain, in default of any early manuscript evidence, that this, or any, sonnet is not the product of a complex process of revision, being a rewritten version of one first composed at an unknown earlier date.

1 Quoted in Rollins, 2.234.

2 Hicatt, ‘LC, Cym and Son’.

More sophisticated stylistic studies, of course, do not rely on single examples or parallels, but on large collections of words, images or phrases, which are then connected with other, more clearly datable, parts of Shakespeare's work, or with that of his contemporaries. Such work was initiated in the late nineteenth century, being undertaken particularly systematically by such German scholars as Hermann Conrad and Gregor Sarrazin, among many others.¹ Their final conclusions were extremely diverse, as Rollins observed: 'the result has often been for men and women of presumably equal intelligence to attain diametrically opposed results'. Such diversity has continued undiminished in the later twentieth century. For instance, T.W. Baldwin, a learned Southamptonite, plumped for an initial group of sonnets (or quire of paper) completed in 1594, and five or six further batches presented to Southampton annually up to 1598 or 1599.² Claes Schaar, in 1962, first assembled a useful collection of parallels with other Elizabethan sonneteers, and then trawled links between Sonnets and the rest of Shakespeare's oeuvre. This led him to date one group of sonnets to 1592–3, and another to 1594–5. Verbal parallels with Shakespeare's later work are, he suggested, instances of his later development of a 'germ' whose original site was in Sonnets, but which 'may long have continued to echo in the poet's mind'.³ In 1975, however, Eliot Slater, setting up a more scientific statistical method for analysing the incidence of rare words in Shakespeare's work, came to the threefold conclusion that A Lover's Complaint is authentically Shakespearean (a view then disputed); that Sonnets

1 Rollins 2.63–5.

2 Baldwin, 340–4.

3 Schaar, 183–94.

belongs to the 'second quarter' of Shakespeare's work; and that A Lover's Complaint belongs to its 'third quarter'.¹

Despite the widely diverse conclusions reached in the past, there does seem a chance that computer-aided stylistic analysis, such as that undertaken by Kent Hiatt and his collaborators, will one day come up with results that prove more generally compelling than those assembled by all previous searchers. The interim suggestions offered by Hiatt in 1991, on the basis of some painstaking and wide-ranging analysis, seem to offer a good working hypothesis, especially if the phrase 'a number' is treated as elastic:

Sonnets is like Daniel's Delia and Drayton's Idea in containing a core of sonnets written in the first half of the fifteen-nineties, but in part revised on into the seventeenth century, and a number of new sonnets added to this core.²

However, given the strong probability that any or every sonnet may be the product of revision, combined with the likelihood that the whole sequence was revised and rearranged during the period immediately before its publication, it seems unlikely that stylistic analysis can ever produce the whole answer. Also, the absolute generic difference between sonnets and plays needs to be borne in mind. Shakespeare may have drawn on a range of vocabulary and literary reference when he was writing sonnets that was wholly distinct from what he used when writing plays. This may have led him on occasion to deploy a 'late rare word' in a sonnet written early, or an 'early rare word' in a sonnet written late. For instance, working on sonnet-writing or sonnet-revision towards the end of the possible period of composition could occasionally have prompted recollections of words or images from the narrative poems, which he then redeployed many years later. Though some individual parallels between passages in Shakespeare's

1 Slater, passim.

2 Hiatt, 'When?', 98.

Sonnets and Shakespeare's other works are very striking (many, but of course not all, are pointed out in notes to individual sonnets), such parallels cannot be taken in isolation as secure evidence of the date of composition of Sonnets or of its component parts. To command general support, stylometric analysis needs to be considered in conjunction with other kinds of evidence.

Internal evidence: topical allusions

Two sonnets, more than any others, have been investigated for the light they appear to shed on the date of composition. One alludes to personal history, the other to public events. Sonnet 104, 'To me, fair friend, you never can be old', chronicles the passage of three whole years 'Since first I saw you fresh', and congratulates the youth for looking no older than he did three years ago. If this is taken as referring literally to the period of the speaker's friendship with the fair youth, it might seem that if we could only discover when this began, it would be possible to date this sonnet (and presumably many of its companions) to a time three years later. However, many other sonneteers had used a fictionalized three-year time-scheme. These included Desportes, Vausquelin de la Fresnaie, Ronsard and – one of Shakespeare's most immediate models – Daniel.¹ It is also remarkable, though perhaps coincidental, that Tennyson, whose In Memoriam has Shakespeare's Sonnets as its model, imposed a fictional three-year scheme, with three Christmases and springs, on a collection of lyrics actually written in the course of nearly seventeen years. Though the possibility of a literal and personal three-year reference cannot be entirely excluded, we are unlikely to encounter solid documentation of the exact calendar of Shakespeare's relationship with his 'fair friend' anywhere outside the sonnets themselves.

The other much-discussed 'dating' sonnet, 107 ('Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul') offers more promising material for investigation. Its account of a peaceful and 'balmy' time which defeats the false prophecies that preceded it clearly alludes to large external events, sufficiently momentous to be well documented. In an article confidently entitled 'Shakespeare's sonnets dated', Leslie Hotson linked it with the year 1589. He took line 5, 'The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured', to allude to the crescent-shaped formation of the Spanish Armada, defeated in 1588; and he reinforced this dating with reference to sonnet 123, linking line 2's 'pyramids, built up with newer might' to Pope Sixtus V's erection of Egyptian obelisks in Rome.¹ Though impressively documented, Hotson's theory has commanded little support. It would require us to believe not only in a Shakespeare who took an active interest in cultural events in Rome, but also in one who had mastered the art of writing densely allusive and complex sonnets at the very beginning of his literary career.

1 Rollins, 1.225–6.

Many intermediate dates have been suggested,² but the only really convincing one is also the most obvious. The 'wonderful year', 1603, saw the eclipse, or death, of the 'mortal moon' Elizabeth, and the peaceful accession of James I, with the release from prison and reception into favour of several leading courtiers. Shakespeare's early patron, the Earl of Southampton, who had been committed to the Tower for his part in Essex's rebellion in 1600/1 was immediately released – 'the King's first act of his accession to the crown of England was to set Southampton free (10 April 1603)'³. Shakespeare's later patron, William Herbert, Third Earl of Pembroke, had jeopardized his position at Elizabeth's court by his affair with Mary Fitton and underwent a short spell of imprisonment in 1601. He too enjoyed immediate blessings at the hand of the new monarch, being installed as a Knight of the Garter on 25 June 1603. The 'balmy time' of 107.9 can be most obviously construed as referring to the miraculously peaceful period initiated by James's

1 Hotson, 1–36.

2 Summarized in Rollins, 1.263–70.

3 Sidney Lee, DNB entry on Southampton.

accession in March 1603, which culminated in his City progress in March 1604 and his subsequent coronation. Elsewhere Shakespeare frequently identifies kingship above all with sacramental 'balm' or chrism. A king's crown may be taken off, but divine unction can never be undone:

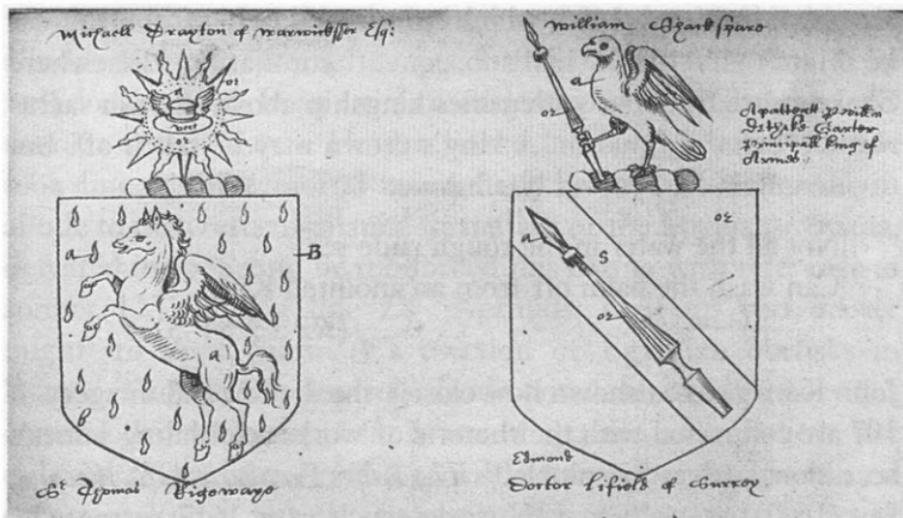

Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm off from an anointed King . . .
(R2 3.2.54–5)

John Kerrigan has shown how closely the diction and imagery of 107 are connected with the rhetoric of works celebrating James's accession, such as Joseph Hall's The Kings Prophecie. OR, Weeping Ioy (1603), as well as with works, such as a 1617 sermon by Donne, which look back to this time.¹ However, he fails to point out that James's ceremonial entry into London was postponed to the early spring of 1604, because of the severe plague outbreak. Though the coronation took place quietly on 25th July 1603, it was not until a year after Elizabeth's death that the 'balmy time' of James's reign was publicly celebrated. Sonnet 107 belongs most probably to the summer of 1604.

An even closer analogy to 107 is to be found in sonnet 51 of the 1605 edition of Drayton's Idea, which exactly mirrors its account of public events turning out, contrary to expectation, peaceful and harmonious, yet even in their peacefulness demonstrating an instability which contrasts with the single-minded love of the speaker:

Calling to mind since first my Love begun,
Th'incertaine Times oft varying in their Course,
How Things still unexpectedly have runne,
As't please the fates, by their resistlesse force:
Lastly, mine Eyes amazedly have seene
ESSEX great fall, TYRONE his Peace to gaine,
The quiet end of that Long-living Queene,

1 Kerrigan, 313–18.

- 1 Michael Drayton's coat of arms beside Shakespeare's. From BL MS Harley 6140, fol. 46'

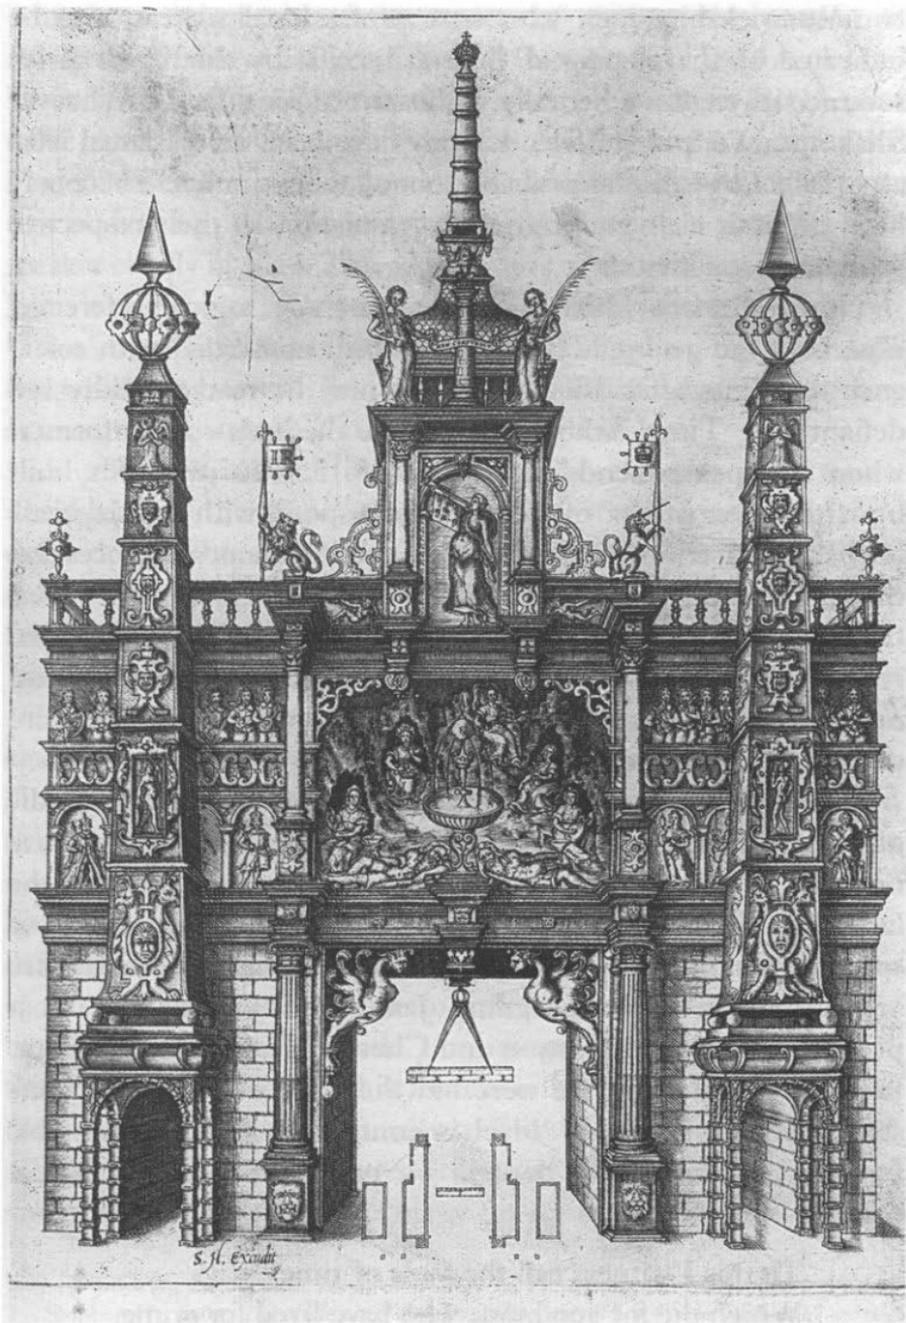

This King's faire Entrance, and our peace with Spaine.
 We and the Dutch at length our selves to sever;
 Thus the World doth, and evermore shall Reele:
 Yet to my Goddess am I constant ever.¹

Drayton's editors suggest 'that Drayton had seen Shakespeare's sonnet and had it in mind'.² This is indeed very probable, especially since Drayton's sonnet must have been written in 1604–5, after the treaty with Spain in August 1604, while Shakespeare's, in which 'Uncertainties now crown themselves assured', seems to belong to the summer of that year, immediately after James's City progress and coronation. Perhaps Drayton wrote his 1605 sonnet in emulation of Shakespeare's. The two shared a tactless negligence in failing to write an elegy for Elizabeth, for which both were rebuked by Henry Chettle in adjacent stanzas of Englands Mourning Garment.³ Some further association between them, as

1 Drayton, 2.336.

2 Ibid., 5.141.

3 Henry Chettle, Englands Mourning Garment (1603), sig. D3'.

2 Triumphal arch with pyramids, 'The new Arabia felix', erected above the Cheapside conduit, March 1603/4. From Stephen Harrison, The Arch's of Triumph (1604), sig. F (Bodleian Gough London 145)

two Warwickshire men who were professional writers, may be indicated by the placing of their arms side by side in an early-seventeenth-century heraldic manuscript (See Fig. 1). Whoever Shakespeare's 'private friends' may have been in the late 1590s, after 1603 Drayton was probably among their number. There may have been an element of friendly emulation in their respective sonneteering activities.

Other sonnets which appear to include topical reference, especially the group 123–5, are also best construed with reference to events after 1600. All three may be read as addressed defiantly to 'Time', who appears to be the 'suborned informer' whom the speaker sends packing in 125.13. The 'pyramids, built up with newer might' of 123 may correspond with the elaborate obelisks and triumphal arches erected for James's procession through the City of London on 15 March 1603/4, in particular the huge one in the Strand (of which, unfortunately, no visual record survives) in which a vast rainbow was supported by 'two magnificent Pyramid's, of 70. foot in height, on which were drawne his Maiesties seuerall pedigrees Eng. and Scot'.¹

Shakespeare's speaker's refusal to be impressed by extraordinary pyramidal structures (see Fig. 2), which 'To me are nothing novel, nothing strange', is entirely consistent with the fact that Shakespeare played no part in devising shows or speeches for this occasion. Many other leading dramatists were actively involved in designing James's City progress, most prominently Dekker, Jonson and Chettle; Shakespeare was not. In 124, 'If my dear love were but the child of state', the constancy of the speaker's 'love' is contrasted with the unstable fortunes of those who depend on political favour. The final couplet –

To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

1 Jonson, 7.106.

– has been linked with a wide variety of victims of execution or martyrdom, from as early as Edmund Campion in 1582 to as late as Essex in 1601. But readers of Shakespeare's Sonnets in 1609 would most naturally understand the lines as alluding to the Gunpowder Plot of November 1605, followed by the execution of the chief plotters in January 1605/6, and it may be these that Shakespeare's speaker chiefly invokes. The conspirators, most of them veterans of Essex's rising, can aptly be described as 'fools of time', on whom 'Time', as in 125.13, has 'informed', betraying them to a criminal's end which may nevertheless be viewed by their Catholic supporters as martyrdom, a death encompassed 'for goodness'.

Sonnet 125, 'Were't ought to me I bore the canopy', again distinguishes the pure constancy of private love, this time defined explicitly as the love of two people – 'mutual render, only me for thee' – from the dangerous complexities of court favour. The 'canopy' of the opening line may refer once more to James's ceremonial passage through the City on 15 March 1603/4, 'hauing a Canopie borne ouer him by 8. knights'¹. Once again the speaker's personal detachment from such pageantry is distinguished from the role of others – most naturally construed as other writers – who have participated in it. Jonson's career as a writer of court masques burgeoned during the years 1604–9; Shakespeare enjoyed no such career, and may have felt rather defiantly defensive about this. In the second quatrain of 125 the speaker casts his mind back to fallen favourites whom he has 'seen' 'spent', or destroyed. The image of 'compound sweet', though so far as I know this has never been pointed out before, could be applied most naturally to Elizabeth's favourite the Earl of Essex, who had been rewarded in 1590 with the 'farm of sweet wines' – the right to charge tax on imported sweet wines.²

1 Stephen Harrison, The Arch's of Triumph (1604), sig. K1. Cf. also Gilbert Dugdale, The Time Triumphant (1604).

2 Strictly speaking, what Essex lost was the renewal of this grant, which had expired in 1598; cf. Lacey, 241–3, 257–67. For Rowland Whyte's account of Essex's arrival in the Queen's bedchamber, see HMC De L'Isle and Dudley, 2.395–6.

He lost it spectacularly in September 1599 after his unlicensed return from Ireland, when he rushed unannounced into Elizabeth's bedchamber at Nonsuch, still booted and muddy, with his face dirty. He could be very aptly described as a 'pitiful gazer', for his sight of her, grey-haired and without her make-up, initiated the sequence of events that led first to his fall from favour, then to his rebellion, and finally to his execution in February 1600/1. As well as suggesting a sweet food or medicine, the phrase 'compound sweet' may suggest a beguiling or attractive financial agreement, for as a verb 'compound' could denote 'to bargain' or 'to make a pecuniary arrangement' (OED 10, 14).

Shakespeare's Sonnets may incorporate some material written very early. The earliest poem of all may be the short-lined 145, 'Those lips that love's own hand did make', if Andrew Gurr's suggestion that it puns on the surname 'Hathaway' is accepted, together with his proposed dating of it to 1582 (see notes). But if we start from the premiss that Q is authorized – the evidence for which is explored further below – it follows that Shakespeare is likely to have put the sequence into its final shape close in time to 1609. In including topical allusions, he would want to refer above all to events readily recognized by readers in that year. We should not be surprised, therefore, if the four sonnets which offer the most explicit 'dating' references all seem to point to a period of about seven years before Q's publication, from Essex's fall in 1599–1600 to the execution of the Gunpowder Plotters in 1606. To readers in 1609 these allusions to public events may have served to make the whole sequence appear topical, even if, as seems probable, it also incorporates a good deal of material written much earlier. Like internal evidence, external reference points to 1603–4 as initiating an intense period of writing (and perhaps revising) which may have continued, off and on, until shortly before publication.

PUBLISHING HISTORY

The authenticity of the 1609 Quarto

As published in 1609, Shakespeare's Sonnets was by no means so aberrant and mistimed as those who attempt to pigeon-hole the entire sequence as early work have often maintained. It is true that the great Elizabethan vogue for sonneteering, in the wake of Sidney's Astrophil and Stella, had spent its force by the end of the 1590s. But James's accession in 1603 stimulated a second wave. From the viewpoint of Jacobean readers, Q could be received as part of this small but vigorous movement to provide the new court culture with its own refashioned sonnet sequences and lyric collections. These were no longer idealistically Petrarchan or Sidneian, but characterized by sportiveness, satirical and epigrammatic touches, and abrupt reversals of mood. Drayton's 1605 redaction of Idea, in which he positively boasted of the 'Wilde, madding, jocund, and irregular' style of his verse, has already been mentioned. John Davies of Hereford's Wittes Pilgrimage, bearing the title-page motto Iucunda vicissitudo rerum ('the joyful changefulness of things'), which may also belong to 1605,¹ expresses a conscious delight in variety and contradiction. It is one of the few sequences to match Shakespeare's in length, consisting of 152 sonnets, followed by a long section of commendatory and miscellaneous poems. Here, 104 playfully amorous sonnets are set in antithesis to a further 48 which are religious and soberly philosophical. The volume is dedicated to Philip Herbert, Earl of Montgomery, and to 'his most honorable other halfe', James Hay. Most of the other sonneteers of the early Jacobean period were Scottish. William Alexander's Aurora, for instance, was published by Shakespeare's Stratford school-fellow Richard Field in 1604. Another Scottish gentleman,

1 John Davies of Herford, Wittes Pilgrimage, through a world of amorous sonnets (no date, but entered in the Stationers' Register on 27 September 1605). The sonnet sequence is followed by an extensive collection of miscellaneous lyrics, many of them associated with the Herbert family.

Alexander Craig, produced three lyric collections between 1603 and 1609, of which the middle one, his Amorose Songes, Sonets and Elegies (1606), is a highly unusual sonnet sequence. Craig distributes his sonnets between eight ladies, chief among them 'Idea' (presumably in emulation of Drayton), and includes also such contrasted love-objects as the 'grave' and stony-hearted Lithocardia and the excitingly promiscuous Lais. Like Drayton and Davies, Craig positively glories in the labyrinthine variety of 'His wandering verse'². His previous volume, The Poeticall Essayes (1603), is even more remarkable for its variety of tone and subject-matter, celebrating both the Stuart royal family and his own lady, left behind in Banff. Craig takes Jacobean grotesqueness to unusual lengths, as when he drinks his absent lady's health in tobacco as well as wine:

for thy health once I carouse each day:
From pype of Loame and for thy saike I souke,
The flegm-attractive far-fett Indian smoake.

His self-contradictions and wild changes of mood are appropriate for that 'wonderful year', in which Scottish gentry newly arrived in London encountered both a splendid new court and a plague-infected City:

Here where the Pest approacheth us so narre,
To smoother breath before we be aware:
For at the gates of our most royall King,
Corrupted Carrions lie: O fearfull thing.²

A more immediate analogy to Shakespeare's Sonnets is provided by a sonnet in the same collection in which Craig expresses his double rage at being betrayed simultaneously by a male friend and a female mistress:

1 Alexander Craig, The Amorose Songes, Sonets and Elegies (1606), sig. I8'.

2 Alexander Craig, Poeticall Essayes (1603), sig. F1'.

Deceitfull shee, and most unconstant hee:
Thus for each lyne I gave my selfe a lye,
That heretofore into their praise I pend.¹

Though this collection is not technically a sonnet sequence, its self-consciously hectic energy, in which the poet seems frequently to feel betrayed by the suppleness of his own art, does offer some analogies to Shakespeare's, especially to such sonnets as 147 – in which

My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth vainly expressed

– or the closing 152, which concludes

. . . I have sworn thee fair: more perjured eye,
To swear against the truth so foul a lie.

The years 1603–9 also saw a proliferation of satirical and epigrammatic poetry, which the salty, 'humorous' character of most of the Jacobean sonnet sequences seems to match. Epigrammatists and satirists include John Owen, Henry Peacham, Richard West (published by Thorpe), and the prolific Samuel Rowlands.² Two further Jacobean sonnet-sequences, however, represent a throwback to the more 'golden', and Petrarchan, style of the 1590s: David Murray's Caelia: containing certaine Sonets was appended to his Sophonisba, 1611, dedicated to Prince Henry; and William Drummond's dignified two-part sequence was included in his ?1614 Poems. Though it is with the more salty, self-contradictory sequences of 1603–6 that Shakespeare's Sonnets has most in common, these late examples testify to the persistence of the sonnet-sequence genre in the first decade of James's reign.

1 Ibid., sig. E2'.

2 John Owen, Epigrammatum libri tres (1606); Henry Peacham, The More the Merrier, containing three-score and odde head-lesse epigrams (1608); Richard West, Wits a.b.c., or A Century of Epigrams (1608); Samuel Rowlands, Looke To It: for Ile Stabbe Ye (1604), Hell's Broke Loose (1605), Humors Looking Glasse (1608). Cf. also William Percy's 'one singuler Booke of Epigrammes', dated 1610, in Huntington MS HM4, fols 195–217.

The traditional twentieth-century view has been that Q was published in some surreptitious or piratical manner. This notion is sometimes reinforced by a further assertion that it was ‘suppressed’ soon after publication,¹ though there is no evidence for either claim. The origins of the widespread belief that Q is unauthorized lie, probably, in deep anxieties felt by British scholars who worked in the aftermath of the infamous ‘Labouchère amendment’ of 1885, which criminalized homosexual acts between consenting adult males, and the subsequent trial of Oscar Wilde in 1895. Wilde had repeatedly associated himself with Shakespeare’s Sonnets, first by writing ‘The Portrait of Master W.H.’² and then in his determined defence of his famous letter to Lord Alfred Douglas, beginning ‘My Own Boy’, which he described as being ‘like a little sonnet of Shakespeare’.³ As such, claimed Wilde, the letter was as far beyond the powers of ordinary human analysis as King Lear or Sonnets. Wilde’s conviction and sentence to two years’ imprisonment with hard labour must have made it a matter of some urgency for ambitious Shakespeare scholars, whose own social standing depended to a large extent on the character of the material they studied, utterly to expunge the association that Wilde had set up between Shakespeare’s Sonnets and his own friendships with numerous young men. That England’s – Europe’s? – greatest poet should have both composed and published highly personal poems which explored a passionate relationship with a ‘lovely boy’, evidently, like Oscar Wilde’s ‘Bosie’, a young aristocrat, must have appeared totally unacceptable.⁴ Shakespeare’s works were

1 Cf. J. Dover Wilson, *Cam*², xlii.

2 First published in Blackwood’s Edinburgh Magazine (July 1889).

3 H. Montgomery Hyde, The Trials of Oscar Wilde (NY 1962) 245 (Third Trial); cf. also First Trial, 115.

4 Sidney Lee’s friend and Balliol contemporary H.C. Beeching, whose career was as a churchman, continued to maintain that the sonnets were personal documents; cf. H.C. Beeching, ed., The Sonnets of Shakespeare (1904), viiff., in which he explicitly rebuts Lee’s purely literary reading, asking, for instance, ‘Did any Elizabethan client . . . speak of his love for his patron as keeping him awake at night?’ It may be significant that Beeching’s DNB biography includes no mention of this edition.

increasingly taught in schools and universities: how could he possibly have nourished – and have publicly articulated – passions of the sort that led to Wilde's being condemned to two years' imprisonment with hard labour?

After his initial rashness in supporting first Pembroke, then Southampton, as candidates for Shakespeare's 'fair friend', Sidney Lee made a speedy about-turn, in 1897–8, altering his DNB article on Shakespeare for the benefit of American readers.¹ To exonerate Shakespeare thoroughly, Lee adopted a belt-and-braces approach: the text was not made public by Shakespeare himself, but neither was it personally compromising. According to Lee, the text had been criminally appropriated by the unscrupulous and piratical Thomas Thorpe, for whom no language of abuse was too strong. But in any case, as he proceeded to demonstrate over the next few years, with special reference to an extensive investigation of French Renaissance poetry, the poems could be seen to lie comfortably within the boundaries of literary tradition – so the text was by no means so compromising as it might at first appear. By 1905 he was prepared to assert that 'Hundreds of sonneteers had celebrated, in the language of love, the charms of young men.'² As Schoenbaum would have said, 'They had not.' But because of Lee's undoubted diligence and scholarship, such claims, though often wholly unsupported by evidence, seem to have been accepted without challenge. Also, according to Lee, most of the sonnets had been completed by 1594, so by the time Thorpe published them, and, 'With characteristic insolence', tacked on a love complaint by another writer, Shakespeare must have pretty much forgotten about them. Should any residue of a 'personal' interpretation survive Lee's account of the sonnets' 'borrowed conceits', at least the whole collection could be conveniently sidelined, biographically, as partaking of the folly of a great man's youth, rather than being regarded as the considered product of Shakespeare's maturity. Why it should be more acceptable to view Shakespeare as fascinated by a male love-object during the first decade of his married life than in his Jacobean maturity is not clear. But certainly in literary-historical terms there might appear to be some neatness in bracketing Sonnets with Venus and Adonis and Lucrece as three products of the early 1590s, after which Shakespeare could be viewed as devoting his writing energies entirely to the theatre. Many late-twentieth-century critics have clung tenaciously to this neat and tidy chronology.¹

1 Schoenbaum, Lives, 370–1.

2 Sidney Lee, ed., Shakespeare's Sonnets (1905), 10.

Contrary to what most previous editors have maintained, there is every reason to believe that the 1609 Quarto publication of Sonnets was authorized by Shakespeare himself. A powerful internal argument lies in his repeated deployment of the theme of immortalization through verse.² Though this traditional motif has precedents in Horace and in the French Pléiade poets, it is hard to see how a writer so aware of practicalities as Shakespeare could claim to immortalize his friend in 'black lines' (63.13) unless he either allowed the sequence to achieve wide circulation in manuscript, which he clearly did not, or ensured that it was printed. Daniel and Drayton, the other two Elizabethan sonneteers who made prominent use of the theme of the immortalizing power of poetry, undoubtedly did use and control print publication of their sequences.³ In addition, three external witnesses testify to Shakespeare's own involvement. The first and most powerful, Thomas Heywood, has already been quoted. According to Heywood, Shakespeare eventually published his sonnets 'in his owne name' – presumably a reference to the genitive title, SHAKE-SPEARES SONNETS – in order to put right the wrong done to him by the piratical Jaggard in 1599. Since Shakespeare was still alive in 1612, and Heywood was a 1 This scenario is vigorously explored by Schmidgall; cf. also Bloom, 3, where Bloom states that Sonnets belongs to '1592 to 1596 or so'.

2 As in 18, 19, 32, 55, 60, 63, 65, 100 and 101.

3 For a contextualization of the theme of poetic immortality, see Leishman, 69–91.

devoted admirer of Shakespeare's work, it seems unlikely that Heywood would make such a claim in print unless he was quite sure of his ground.

William Drummond, possibly also writing in Shakespeare's lifetime, circa 1614, just at the time when he published his own sonnets, made some notes on various English poets. Listing those who had written 'on the Subject of Love', he cited Wyatt, Surrey, Sidney, Daniel, Drayton and Spenser. He noted that although Raleigh and Dyer had been praised by Puttenham, 'their Works are so few that are come to my Hands, I cannot well say any thing of them. The last we have are Sir William Alexander and Shakspear, who have lately published their Works.'¹ Sir William Alexander's youthful sonnet sequence Aurora, already mentioned, had been published in 1605, by Shakespeare's Stratford school-fellow Richard Field. Shakespeare's 'Works' on the topic of 'Love' must presumably denote the 1609 Q, and the plural form of reference may indicate that Drummond accepted A Lover's Complaint as an integral part of the collection. It is noteworthy also that Drummond's phrase 'The last we have' chronicles the reception of Shakespeare's Sonnets as a Jacobean text, not as a late appearance of a sequence originally written much earlier – but not much can be made of this.

The third witness is the most dubious. The entrepreneurial publisher John Benson, in his Epistle prefaced to Poems: Written by Wil. Shake-speare. Gent (1640), referred to: 'some excellent and swetely composed Poems, of Master William Shakespeare, which in themselves appeare of the same purity, the Authour himselfe then living avouched'. While it may at first seem that Benson is claiming to know from personal experience that Shakespeare habitually 'avouched' the integrity and authenticity of Q, it is more probable that he simply alludes to Q's title-page, which describes the sonnets both as 'SHAKE-SPEARES', and as 'Neuer before Imprinted'. Though Benson had in fact drawn on the 1612 Passionate Pilgrim, as well as altering and rearranging the authentic sonnets, his point may have been to advertise his own text as based on work publicly acknowledged by Shakespeare, in contrast to The Passionate Pilgrim.

1 William Drummond of Hawthornden, Works (1711), 226.

The manner in which Q was entered in the Stationers' Register on 20 May 1609 by Thomas Thorpe as 'a Booke called SHAKESPEARES sonnettes' appears to have been perfectly regular and businesslike. It is quite consistent with Thorpe's practice in publishing other texts which we know to have been authorized. Among his other recent publications were Jonson's Sejanus his Fall (1605), Hymenaei (1606), Volpone (1607), Masques of Blackness and of Beautie (1608); Chapman, Jonson and Marston's Eastward Ho! (1605); Marston's What You Will (1607); and Chapman's Conspiracie and Tragedie of Byron (1608). These seem in each case to have been authorized texts, and in many cases to have been authorially corrected while at press.¹ The majority were printed by George Eld, the printer of Q. Sidney Lee's oft-repeated assertion that Thorpe's line of business was as a 'procurer of neglected "copy"'² is completely unsupported by evidence. Indeed, it seems that during the period of his publication of Shakespeare's Sonnets Thorpe had built up a powerful reputation as a publisher of authorized texts by leading dramatists. But we may wonder why, if Shakespeare himself sold Sonnets, he did not turn once more to Richard Field, his Stratford school-fellow, who had published his narrative poems in 1593 and 1594, and, more recently, Alexander's sonnet sequence Aurora.

The answer may lie in Thorpe's theatrical associations. Though non-dramatic poetry did not figure much in Thorpe's 'list', his work for Shakespeare's fellow dramatists must inevitably have drawn him to his attention. After all, Shakespeare had been one of the 'leading Tragedians' in Jonson's Sejanus his Fall (Tiberius or Sejanus, perhaps?), and it has even been suggested that he had a hand in writing it.¹ He could scarcely have failed to notice the up-market print publication of this play, which had been a flop in the theatre, and to observe also that it was published by Thorpe and printed by Eld, 'who discharged his difficult task with a high degree of accuracy'². Having noticed that, Shakespeare surely also took note of Thorpe's 1607 publication of Volpone. It may reasonably be supposed that Thorpe gave a good price for literary texts by dramatists, for Jonson, to name but one, is most unlikely to have settled for anything else. For Shakespeare too, in a severe plague year, the price must have been an important consideration, even if he ended up feeling that he had 'sold cheap what is most dear' (110.3).

1 For a full list of Thorpe's publications, see Katharine F. Pantzer, STC, 3.168; for a detailed account of his publishing career, see Duncan-Jones, 'Sonnets unauthorized?'.
2 Lee, 94.

The division of copies between two booksellers, William Aspley and John Wright, indicates that Thorpe was determined to maximize his return on his adventurous 'setting forth' of Shakespeare's sonnets, and may suggest also that a larger than normal print-run had been produced.³ William Aspley's shop was in St Paul's Churchyard, at the sign of 'the Parrot'; John Wright's was a little to the north, at the door of Christ Church nearest to Newgate.⁴ Whether the moneyed classes returned to the City after the plague-ridden summer of 1609 by way of the Strand or of Holborn, they would pass near one of the shops at which Shakespeare's Sonnets was on sale. If title-pages were posted up as publicity, the large-size capitalized 'SHAKE-SPEARES' in the top line was bound to be attractive, at this

1 Barton, 94.

2 Jonson, 4.330.

3 The suggestion recorded by Kerrigan (427) 'that Thorpe diverted copies to avoid the suppression of his volume by Shakespeare' is absurd. Aspley had worked for Thorpe on many other publications; John Wright may have been chosen as the secondary bookseller precisely because his shop was in a conspicuous position.

4 STC, 3.6, 190.

period when his reputation was at its lifetime zenith.

Needless to say, given the widespread view of Q as a surreptitious publication, many scholars have also regarded the text itself as exceptionally badly printed, though the text has also had some enthusiastic champions.¹ Lee, as ever, was the most outspoken of Q's critics, claiming not only that there was at least one 'defect' every ten lines, but also that 'the compositors followed an unintelligent transcript'. For Lee, nothing at all about Q could be praised – he saw it as a slovenly version of a stolen manuscript itself of poor quality. However, through a painstaking analysis of supposed 'misprints' H.E. Rollins demonstrated that a high proportion of the word-forms so identified by Lee and others were no more than either variant spellings, perfectly acceptable in the period, or slight orthographical oddities. He reduced the list of eighty-four 'misprints' assembled by Lee and others to a mere thirty-six. The present edition, in which some previously emended words are retained, reduces the list yet further. Some of the oddities labelled 'defects' by Lee may reflect a dogged attempt by Eld's compositors – who were accustomed, after all, to working for the exceptionally pernickety Jonson – to be faithful to the peculiarities of their copy. For instance, the fourteen occurrences of 'their' for 'thy' seem to testify to the literalness with which they replicated what they thought they read in their copy, even when it made poor sense.

Admittedly, unlike those of Jonson's texts which had undergone careful proof-correction, Q could not be described as especially well printed, and A Lover's Complaint, especially, shows signs of haste and carelessness – unless, which is possible, that part of the manuscript copy was markedly worse written. But some of the features that give a bad impression visually have no bearing on textual accuracy. For instance, there seems to have been a severe shortage of good-quality titling type, needed for the initial letter of of each sonnet, and this problem was exacerbated by Shakespeare's habit of opening sonnets with questions or exclamations. Twenty-three sonnets open with the letter W, which appears in four different founts: large 'VV' (three times), smaller 'vv' (eleven times), small 'w' (seven times) and italic 'w' (twice). Other large capitals that appear in varying sizes include H, S and O. Yet the compositors may have done their best to be faithful in printing from manuscript copy that was at times hard to read. Indeed, some of the peculiarities of spelling that Lee called 'defects' may reflect Shakespeare's own characteristic spelling patterns. Though MacD. P. Jackson has distinguished compositors 'A' and 'B', partly with reference to differences in the spelling of some frequently occurring words, such as 'O'/'Oh', 'ritch'/'rich', 'dost'/'doost', some of the oddly spelt words that occur only once, such as 'miter' (metre, 17.12) or 'sugiest' (suggest, 144.2), may reflect the spelling of the copy. Compositorial habit is less likely to operate in the case of less common words. Also, one of the compositors may have been more faithful to the forms he found in his copy than the other was, his spelling practice being closer to the copy than that of his colleague.¹

1 Rollins 2.6–11.

Whether the copy manuscript itself was autograph, as Chambers and others have suggested, or a scribal transcript, perhaps with authorial corrections, Lee's account of it as 'unintelligent' is simply abusive. For instance, care is consistently given to the elision or inclusion of medial 'e' in relation to metre, and this is something that appears to have been characteristic also of Shakespeare's orthography.² There are very few instances of metrically necessary soundings or elisions which have not been marked visually. In order to make this clear, Q's elisions are recorded among the textual collations. Q's care for metrical correctness is consonant with careful reading of authorial copy.

1 For strong evidence that Eld's printers at this period were normally faithful to the accidentals they found in their copy, see Murray.

2 Partridge, Orthography, 70.

Since we know next to nothing about Shakespeare's scribal habits, especially with reference to non-dramatic poetry, it is difficult to estimate the extent to which other features of Q may reflect them. For instance, thirty-three words are italicized. These may well have been italicized in the copy. Setting up in italic required compositors to turn to another case of type, and there seems no great reason why Eld's men should have gone to this extra trouble unless they believed that the change of fount was required of them by their copy. As George Wyndham pointed out in 1898,¹ many of the italicized words are either proper nouns, such as 'Adonis' (53.5), 'Mars' (55.7), 'Eaues' (93.13) or 'Philomell' (102.7), or words of Greek or Latin origin, such as 'Autumne' (104.5), 'Abisme' (112.9), or 'Hereticke' (124.9). But some of the italicized proper names cannot be adequately explained with reference to normal printing-house practice.² The most complex example is 135, with its seven italicized occurrences of 'Will', which are subtly and precisely distinguished from six unitalicized, and uncapitalized, occurrences of 'will'. It is hard to envisage that anyone other than the poet could differentiate these thirteen instances of 'Will' / 'will' in such a careful manner. Also, it is hard to imagine why anyone except the poet should have gone to the trouble of italicizing various words that do not fall into the normal categories, such as 'Rose' (1.2), 'Hews' (20.7), 'Informer' (125.13) or 'Alloes' (LC 273). Lee's suggestion³ that Shakespeare never learned to write italic script seems quite unconvincing, given his chosen profession, and the high standards of Stratford Grammar School.

The manuscript on which Q was based may indeed have been 'formally distinctive, if not eccentric', as Kerrigan suggests, but that is surely no argument for its being also 'non-authorial'.⁴ Were a literary autograph certainly by Shakespeare ever to turn

1 Rollins, 2.7.

2 Cf. McKerrow, 251.

3 Lee, 294.

4 Kerrigan, 431.

up, it could well prove to be ‘formally distinctive’. After all, Jonson was to praise Shakespeare’s writing for its uniquely characteristic nature:

Look how the fathers face
Liues in his issue, euen so, the race
Of Shakespeares minde, and manners brightly shines
In his well torned, and true-filed lines
In each of which, he seemes to shake a Lance,
As brandish’t at the eyes of Ignorance.¹

Though he was no doubt alluding chiefly to Shakespeare’s literary style, Jonson may have been familiar also with his spear-shakingly recognizable penmanship. If the orthography of Q is eccentric, its eccentricity may be to some extent authorial. According to A.C. Partridge, ‘Shakespeare’s spelling was old-fashioned in its attachment to full-spellings and its curious blend of Tudor, individual and pseudo-phonetic representations.’² He sees Shakespeare as learning better habits, after 1600, from Ben Jonson, but it is unlikely that his habits were wholly transformed. Indeed, in a later study Partridge has suggested that the ‘numerous idiosyncratic spellings’ in Q may be Shakespeare’s own.³ The ‘book’ sold to Thorpe may have taken the form either of an autograph manuscript or of an authorially corrected scribal transcript.

Benson and beyond

The still popular practice of rearranging Shakespeare’s Sonnets to produce the appearance of a different overall meaning or bearing began with the bookseller John Benson’s edition in 1640.⁴ Though boldly entitled Poems: Written by Wil. Shake-speare. Gent,

1 Jonson, 8.392

2 Partridge, Orthography, 79.

3 Partridge, Grammar, 111.

4 Poems: Written by Wil. Shake-speare. Gent . . . , to be sold by John Benson, dwelling in St. Dunstons Church-yard (1640).

Benson's edition was even more outrageously piratical and misleading than Jaggard's 1612 Passionate Pilgrim, whose material it incorporated. About thirty of the poems it attributes to Shakespeare are by other writers.¹ The later parts of the volume are particularly confusing, with A Lover's Complaint surrounded by poems of Heywood's, and The Phoenix and the Turtle placed after the song (perhaps by Fletcher) 'Take, O take those lips away' and before Orlando's mawkish verses beginning 'Why should this a desert be?', from As You Like It (3.2.121ff.). These last, when forced into a context which makes them appear to be amorous verses of Shakespeare's own, seem particularly feeble. There is little doubt that Benson set out at once to ingratiate and to mislead his readers. There is a visible attempt, though not an entirely efficient one, to suggest that the addressee throughout is a woman. The 'he' pronoun is often, though not quite always, altered to 'she', and changes such as 'sweet love' for 'sweet boy' (108.5), or the entitling of 122 'Vpon the receipt of a Table Book from his Mistris', reinforce the suggestion that these are conventional, heterosexual love sonnets. But Benson's adaptation was unsystematic and incomplete. Though 126 ('O thou my lovely Boy . . .') is among eight sonnets omitted from his collection, the even more compromising 20 ('A woman's face . . .') is retained, with a title, 'The Exchange', which will surely not prevent attentive readers of the last six lines from noticing that the addressee must be anatomically male. In his prefatory epistle, Benson had the impudence to praise Shakespeare's sonnets for their lucidity:

in your perusall you shall finde them Seren, cleere and elegantly plaine, such gentle straines as shall recreate and not perplexe your braine, no intricate or cloudy stuffe to puzzell intellect, but perfect eloquence.

He must have been well aware that his own rearrangement and titling of the sonnets, his habitual running together of two or more sonnets to give the appearance of a longer poem, together with his mingling of Shakespearean with non-Shakespearean poems throughout the volume, was extremely misleading. His epistle may be taken as cogent evidence that the very difficult and original 1609 sonnets had indeed acquired a reputation, over the previous thirty years, for being 'intricate or cloudy'. Though he makes no explicit allusion to the sex of Shakespeare's addressee, Benson's use of the word 'Seren' may have been intended to offer vague reassurance on this score to readers who had picked up a notion that Shakespeare's Sonnets was in some way abnormal, as well as puzzling.

1 The figure is imprecise because of the Shakespearean dubia included in The Passionate Pilgrim.

For well over a century, Benson succeeded in muddying the textual waters. It was his edition that was read and edited, almost exclusively, until the superb work of Malone in 1780. Even the publisher Bernard Lintott (perhaps aided by the dramatist Congreve), though he presented a text based on Q, seems to have shared Benson's determination to heterosexualize the sequence, at least superficially. Sonnets 1–154 are described as 'One Hundred and Fifty Sonnets, all of them in Praise of his Mistress' (note the assertiveness of that 'all'); and very oddly, A Lover's Complaint is called 'A Lover's Complaint of his Angry Mistress', thus identifying a male narrator, rather than a female complainer, as the 'Lover' of the title.¹ Neither of these descriptions, one would have thought, could long survive a close perusal of the poems themselves, which the editor transmits rather carefully. Possibly the unknown editor wanted to be faithful to Q, but Lintott felt that these titles should be added to reassure book-buyers that all the poems they were about to read were dedicated to the praise of Shakespeare's mistress, leaving them to discover the unlikelihood of this only when they got the volumes back home.

1 A Collection of Poems, in Two Volumes: Being all the Miscellanies of Mr. William Shakespeare, which were Publish'd by himself in the year 1609, and now correctly printed from those Editions, Printed for Bernard Lintott (?1711).

Though George Steevens included (without any comment or annotation) a version of Q in his 1766 edition of Twenty of the Plays of Shakespeare,¹ neither this nor the Lintott text seems to have excited much interest. Edward Capell prepared a further edition, based on 'Lintott', but it never reached print.² It was not until 1780 that the 1609 text was properly instated as the sole authoritative text of Shakespeare's sonnets, when Edmond Malone brought out his two-volume Supplement to the 1778 Johnson–Steevens edition of the plays. Malone, apparently unruffled, observed that 'one hundred and twenty [sic] of the following poems' are addressed to a man, and claimed that parallels with the plays 'leave not the smallest doubt of their authenticity'.³ But the harm had been done. Benson's edition had successfully introduced doubts about whether or how often the speaker addressed a man, and implicitly suggested that, if rearranged, the sonnets might yield up a more conventional, accessible and socially acceptable message.

Even Malone, while observing wisely that 'Daniel's sonnets, which were published in 1592', appear to be Shakespeare's chief model, apparently failed to notice the structural parallel between Daniel's Delia plus The Complaint of Rosamond, and Shakespeare's Sonnets plus A Lover's Complaint. He relegated A Lover's Complaint to the very end of the volume, interposing The Passionate Pilgrim and The Phoenix and the Turtle before it. Though he did not explicitly challenge the authenticity of A Lover's Complaint, Malone's low-key remark that 'This poem was printed in 1609, with our author's name, at the end of the quarto edition of his Sonnets',⁴ combined with his relegation of it to the very end of the volume, suggests that he had some doubts about it. Although a few later editors, such as Pooler,

1 George Steevens, ed., Twenty of the Plays of Shakespeare (1766), iv.

2 The copy of Lintott's edition marked up by Capell is in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge.

3 Malone, 1.579–81.

4 Ibid., 1.732.

have included A Lover's Complaint in editions of Sonnets despite such doubts – Pooler conceded no more than that ‘it contains lines that might have been written by Shakespeare’¹ – it is only with Kerrigan’s edition in 1986 that the Complaint has been confidently restored to its original position as an integral component of the sequence. Benson’s disintegration of Q did lasting damage.

CONTEXT AND ALLUSION

How do we reconcile Shakespeare’s consistently scornful allusions to sonnets and sonneteering in his plays with the fact of his having composed one of the longest sonnet sequences of the period? Sonnet-writing, in the early comedies, is presented either as a trite and cynical aid to wooing – Proteus advises the lovesick Thurio

You must lay lime, to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Should be full-fraught with serviceable vows (TGV 3.2.69–71)

– or as a sign of the mentally debilitating effect of love. Each of the four young men in Love's Labour's Lost in turn betrays his collapse into passion by the penning of a (bad) sonnet – or, in one case, lyric – prompted by the new experience. Their composition of a sonnet apiece is the clinching proof, in Much Ado, that Beatrice and Benedick have fallen in love (LLL 4.3; MA 5.4.86–90). In All's Well Parolles uses a part-sonnet to warn Diana against Bertram, to which Bertram responds, ‘He shall be whipp’d through the army, with this rhyme in’s forehead’ (AW 4.3.203–25). Certainly sonnets and soldiery do not mix. When the Dauphin, in Henry V, proposes to compose a sonnet in praise of his horse, it is quite clear from his companions’ comments that this reveals his narcissism and weakness of character, and not merely because sonnet-writing is an inappropriate ploy for a commander on the eve of fighting a major battle (H5 3.7.42ff.). A taste for reading collections of sonnets, likewise, is associated by Shakespeare with feeble-mindedness, as when the hopelessly weedy Master Slender, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, declares 'I had rather than forty shillings I had my book of songs and sonnets here' (MW 1.1.179–80). Two of Shakespeare's most intelligent lovers, Orlando and Hamlet, deliver themselves when in love of puerile verses (though not in sonnet form) which suggest mental and aesthetic collapse. In the theatre, it seems, Shakespeare almost invariably presents the writing of love poetry in general, and sonnets in particular, as ridiculous.

1 *Ard*¹, x1.

The answer may lie in the radical difference between Shakespeare's Sonnets and all its Elizabethan and Continental predecessors. These poems have none of the tediously predictable quality of the love sonnets mocked in the plays. They are not merely non-Petrarchan and non-Sidneian, but in important respects both anti-Petrarchan and anti-Sidneian. Though Sidney ostensibly distinguished Astrophil's heartfelt utterances from 'poor Petrarch's long deceased woes'¹, he did, nevertheless, write within the elastic boundaries of Petrarchanism, as redrawn by sixteenth-century French and Italian imitators. At a technical level, Sidney's sonnets are all written in the exacting 'Italian' form. The inclusion of songs within the sequence is also a broadly Petrarchan feature. But most conspicuously, the poems as a whole are, like Petrarch's, addressed to a single fictionalized and idealized female love-object, 'Stella', who proves, in the face of all of Astrophil's rhetorical endeavours, to be unattainable. Like Petrarch's Laura and Sidney's Stella, the addressees of Sidney's many English imitators, such as Lodge, Drayton, Daniel, Barnes and Fletcher, are also female.

Despite Sidney Lee's bold claim, quoted above (p. 33), that 'Hundreds of sonneteers had celebrated . . . the charms of young men', there is actually only one other Elizabethan sonnet sequence with a young male addressee, Richard Barnfield's mini-sequence of twenty 'Sonnets' included in his Cynthia (1595).¹ Indeed, there appears to be some as yet unexplained connection between Shakespeare and Barnfield. Two poems by Barnfield were included alongside Shakespeare's in The Passionate Pilgrim; Francis Meres, when he revealed to the world the existence of Shakespeare's 'sugred Sonnets', also gave particular praise to 'my friend master Richard Barnefielde'; and most teasingly, Barnfield's Cynthia is prefaced by a floridly over-written commendatory poem by one 'T.T.', whose tone of cryptic knowingness is somewhat analogous to that of Thomas Thorpe's dedication to Q. It ends:

1 AS, 15.7.

So those rare Sonnets, where wits ripe doth lie,
With Troian Nymph, doe soare thy fame to skie,
And those, and these, contend thy Muse to raise (Larke mounting Muse) with more then common praise.

Like Barnfield's twenty sonnets to 'Ganymede', but unlike every other Elizabethan sequence, Shakespeare's sonnets 1–126 celebrate a young male love-object; and so in a sense does A Lover's Complaint, much of which consists of a nameless maiden's anatomy of the irresistible charms and wiles of her young seducer. In making a young man's beauty and worth his central focus, Shakespeare may be seen as overturning the conventions of more than two hundred years of 'Petrarchanism', broadly interpreted.

Despite a widespread notion, promoted by such Victorian and Edwardian critics as Gerald Massey and Thomas Tyler, that the major question prompted by Shakespeare's Sonnets is the identity of the 'dark lady', only just over a sixth of the sonnets in the volume are unambiguously associated with a woman. Even those which are so associated can be seen as brutally defiant of Petrarchanism. Instead of exploring the subtle and complex effect on the speaker of an obsession with a chaste and high-born lady who can never be possessed physically, 127–52 offer backhanded praise of a manifestly non-aristocratic woman who is neither young, beautiful, intelligent nor chaste, but, like Touchstone's Audrey, provides a perfectly adequate outlet for male desire. In the famous 130 ('My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun') the poet issues an explicit challenge to all those other poets by whom mistresses have hitherto been 'belied with false compare'. Though Shakespeare's celebration of 'black' beauty has often been linked with Sidney, whose 'Stella' has black eyes, it is really horribly different, for this woman also has a muddy complexion, bad breath and a clumsy walk. With utter cynicism, the speaker praises her as 'a poor thing, but mine own' (compare AYL 5.4.58), celebrating her in swaggering terms which are ingeniously offensive both to her and to women in general. While Sidney's Astrophil wished that 'Pleasure might cause her read' his sonnets,¹ there could surely be no question of the woman described in Sonnets either reading or understanding what is said about her, let alone receiving any pleasure from it. Shakespeare's speaker seems, like Touchstone, to brag to other men in his audience that he can make satisfactory sexual use of a woman too stupid to realize that she is also being set up as the butt of his wit.

1 Richard Barnfield, Cynthia. With Certaine Sonnets, and the Legend of Cassandra (1595).

A strongly misogynistic bias is hinted at early on in the sequence. The youth may be celebrated in sonnet 18 as 'more temperate' in beauty than other poets' love-objects partly because, unlike them, he does not menstruate, so his beauty is not continually diminished by 'nature's changing course' (menstrual bleeding was known as 'monthly courses', OED 27). In 20 the youth is praised for possessing female beauty without female instability – 'An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling' – nor is he 'acquainted / With shifting change, as is false women's fashion' (see notes). He is anatomized as physiologically, as well as morally, superior to the female love-objects so over-praised by those poets who have been 'Stirred by a painted beauty' (21.2). A suspicion of some preoccupation with the negative connotations of menstruation is confirmed when the reader reaches the woman-focused 127–54 if it is observed that the total of these 'dark lady' sonnets is twenty-eight, corresponding with the lunar month or menstrual cycle.

1 AS, 1.3.

In 1–126, which constitute what is in every sense the greater part of Shakespeare's Sonnets, Shakespeare seems rarely to refer to Petrarchanism, except by means of the implicit challenge or redefinition that he offers to it throughout in eulogizing a young male friend, rather than a distant, idealized woman, and in making almost no claims to spiritual enlightenment. An early annotator wrote at the end of his copy of Q 'What a heap of wretched Infidel Stuff'¹. Although the exclusion of Petrarch's treatment of secular love as a route to religious transcendence characterizes many English responses to Petrarchanism, it is unusually marked in the case of Shakespeare. Indeed, in some sonnets he seems to push his idolatrous substitution of friendship for Christian worship to flamboyantly blasphemous extremes, as in the mock-Trinitarian rhetoric of 105, 'Let not my love be called idolatry', culminating in:

Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.

Fair, kind and true have often lived alone,

Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

One answer, then, to the question of why Shakespeare composed a sonnet sequence might be literary. He sought to appropriate and redefine the genre, rejecting the stale conceits of mistress-worship, and to create a sonnet sequence so different from all its predecessors that the form could never be the same again. The title, 'SHAKE-SPEARES SONNETS', can be read as suggesting this. Shakespeare presents the paramount sonnet sequence, which both continues and conclusively redefines that 'excellence of sweet poesie' which had been demonstrated nearly twenty years earlier in Sidney's Astrophil and Stella. The homoerotic thrust of 1–126, combined with the outrageous misogyny of 127–54, may also be construed as designed to gratify the literary culture of James's court, rather than (necessarily) to reflect or express any personal preference on the part of Shakespeare 'the man'.

1 The copy in the Rosenbach Collection; cf. Rollins, 2.348.

However, an alternative or additional approach to answering the question I have asked – why did Shakespeare write a sonnet sequence, since he seems to have despised traditional love poetry? – lies in recourse to biography, or biographical speculation. Romantic critics have liked to view Shakespeare as surprised into sonnetting by some real-life experience. Ever since the edition of Sonnets in 1837 by James Boaden, the first Pembrokian, scholars have pursued possible personal allusions. A popular view, especially among those who have not studied the whole sequence thoroughly, singles out the identity of the 'dark lady' as the chief question to be addressed. Frank Harris went to the length of suggesting that Shakespeare was stung into dramatic, as well as poetic, creativity by an unhappy affair with Mary Fitton, and owed her 'the greater part of his renown'¹. This notion has been passionately endorsed by A.L. Rowse, who, on lighting on Emilia Lanier, exclaimed to his friends 'This is she! This is the Lady!' He gave one of the books in which he chronicled his 'discovery' the confident title Shakespeare's Sonnets: The Problems Solved (1973).

The search for 'the Lady' appears to have been driven by two motives. The first is a post-Romantic determination to conventionalize and familiarize Shakespeare's Sonnets, to attach the poems to that very courtly love tradition which, I have just suggested, Shakespeare was explicitly rejecting and debunking. Once identified, Shakespeare's femme fatale could supposedly join the ranks of other such ladies, from Petrarch's Laura to 1 Harris, 231.

Keats's Fanny Brawne or W.B. Yeats's Maud Gonne, and as a consequence Shakespeare, as a love poet, could be comfortably assimilated into a great European tradition. Some Victorian and Edwardian scholars, such as Gerald Massey and Thomas Tyler, devoted large parts of their lonely lives to the quest for 'the lady', and Frank Harris and Bernard Shaw competed to dramatize the story of Shakespeare's 'tragic love'. Working before the twentieth-century critical cult of ambiguity and word-play, these writers seem to have been oblivious to the sheer nastiness of many of the 'dark lady' sonnets, which can now be seen to encompass not so much passionate devotion to a distantly cruel mistress as elaborate mockery of a woman who is no more than a sexual convenience.

The second, and possibly most powerful, driving force behind the quest for 'the Lady' has been its power of suggestio falsi. The foregrounding of 'the Lady' strongly implies that the predominant thrust of Shakespeare's Sonnets is heterosexual. Devotees of an idealized, domesticated, image of Shakespeare the man may be a little uncomfortable at a suspicion of adultery, but this is nothing like so alarming as a suspicion of pederasty. The awkward fact that more than four-fifths of the sequence is devoted to celebrating a fair youth and to exploring the speaker's relationship with him can be bypassed if readers' attention is firmly enough directed towards 'her'. In the case of Rowse, this motive has been delightfully transparent. While happy to categorize Marlowe as 'a raving homo', Rowse has been equally outspoken in his identification of 'the Bard' as a 'red-blooded heterosexual', instinctively thrilled by 'the frou-frou of skirts'.¹ To his credit, he does take full account of 1-126, but offers splendidly idiosyncratic readings of these sonnets. Stupid people may have thought the notorious 20 a little compromising, for instance, but according to Rowse, 'the boot is quite on the other leg . . . it was not Shakespeare who was homosexual, but the young peer who would not have minded. This is indisputable.¹

1 Personal conversation with K.D.-J. at All Souls, c. 1984.

Despite such attempts to foreground 'the Lady', 'Mr. W.H.' (Dedication 3) has of course also been the subject of much speculation, as has the 'rival poet' apparently alluded to in 78–86. Rollins offers a very full account of biographical interpretation up to 1944, and Schoenbaum continues the story brilliantly up to 1991 in his revised Shakespeare's Lives, concluding that 'this author fearlessly predicts that, whether or not there will be an end of human foolery, we have not heard the last of W.H.'² Schoenbaum's remark was prompted in part by a more recent attempt to put a woman at the centre of Shakespeare's Sonnets, Barbara Everett's 1986 article on 'Mrs. Shakespeare'. She suggested that Anne Hathaway, 'a powerful, even attractively masculine woman', identified herself as the master-mistress of the poet's passion, and that the valuable text was appropriated and sold to Thorpe by her presumed brother William Hathaway. In its bold creativity and defiance of documentary evidence this article merits comparison with Rowse at his most imaginative.

No doubt Schoenbaum's general proposition is correct, and the present edition is no more likely to put an end to biographical speculation than previous studies have done.³ Nevertheless, the contextualization suggested here for Shakespeare's Sonnets, as a sequence in part written after 1600, and put into its final shape close in time to its authorized publication in 1609, carries with it some further implications for the identification of 'Mr. W. H.' The case for Southampton, one of the two strongest candidates, effectively collapses if this dating is accepted. Not only are Henry Wriothesley's initials the wrong way round; he was over 35 in 1609, and recollections of the time when he was a 'lovely boy' were rather distant. Also, as Chambers pointed out, if Southampton were the poet's 'fair friend', 'one would expect to find some hints . . . of the major interests of Southampton's early life; his military ambitions, his comradeship with Essex, the romance of his marriage. There are none.¹

1 Rowse, xxv.

2 Schoenbaum, Lives, 566.

3 For another attempt to put an end to further speculation, see Foster, who claims that 'W.H.' is a misprint for 'W.SH.'

Chambers also declared himself 'rather struck by the fact that, although Southampton was still alive, it was not to him, but to Herbert and his brother that [the First Folio] was dedicated'. He felt that the case for William Herbert (1580–1630), Third Earl of Pembroke (see Fig. 3), had been 'mishandled' by previous scholars, such as Tyler, because of their preoccupation with Mary Fitton, the supposed 'dark lady'. She continued to attract strong devotees despite evidence for her fair complexion; despite the fact that she was unmarried at the time of her affair with Herbert, not tied by a 'bed-vow', like the woman of sonnet 152; and despite the fact that, as a Maid of Honour, she was a well-guarded court lady not very likely to consort with a middle-aged actor. Even now there is some danger that Mary Fitton's candidature for the role of 'dark lady' may confuse the case for Herbert, so it requires to be disposed of. The monstrously sexist assumption that a woman who is sufficiently attracted to one man to consummate her love without marriage would have been prepared to have sex with anyone has coloured a surprising number even of later-twentieth-century interpretations of Shakespeare's Sonnets.² This assumption also crucially underpins Rowse's support for Emilia Lanier, which seems to depend on a belief that a woman who was Lord Hunsdon's mistress would be willing to have sex with anyone, including, therefore, Shakespeare. Yet in reality, the mistress of such an eminent nobleman as either young William Herbert or old Lord Hunsdon would be most unlikely (even if so inclined) to jeopardize her own position and the status of her future or actual child by promiscuity. If the 'dark lady' is still to be sought in literal terms, it should be borne in mind not only that Mary Fitton was light-complexioned and unmarried, but also that though a nobleman might readily visit taverns and stews, as do Shakespeare's Prince Hal in 1 and 2 Henry IV, and Lysimachus in Pericles, it would be virtually impossible for a common player, even a member of the King's Men, to penetrate the chambers of the Maids of Honour.

1 Chambers, Shakespeare, 1.565–7.

2 For an extended challenge to another instance of the persistence of this view, see Lindley.

3 Simon van de Passe, engraved portrait of William Herbert, Third Earl of Pembroke (1580–1630). From Henry Holland, Basilologia: A Booke of Kings (1618), fol. 89^r (Bodleian 4^o Rawl. 170)

The chief bearing of Mary Fitton on the case for William Herbert as 'W.H.' lies in the fact that she was at least the fourth well-born girl whom Herbert resolutely refused to marry. In 1595 an attempt to betroth Herbert to Elizabeth Carey, daughter and sole heir of Sir George Carey, had to be abandoned because of the young man's 'not liking'. (Her subsequent marriage to Sir Thomas Berkeley has often been identified, most recently by David Wiles,¹ as the likely occasion for A Midsummer Night's Dream). Two years later, in the summer of 1597, a further attempt was made to match him suitably, this time to Bridget Vere, Lord Burghley's grand-daughter, and daughter of the Earl of Oxford. This, too, collapsed after some months of negotiation. Herbert's father was by now a sick man, and desperate to see his elder son suitably matched before he succeeded to the earldom. Yet another marriage, to a niece of Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham, was attempted, and failed, in the summer of 1599. Robert Sidney's agent Rowland Whyte reported that 'I do not find any disposition at all in this gallant young Lord to marry'². It was not that Herbert was lacking in sexual passion: indeed, according to Clarendon's later testimony, 'he was immoderately given up to women'. It was to marriage, specifically, that he was strongly averse. Early in 1600–1 he had made Mary Fitton pregnant, 'but utterly renounceth all marriage', despite a spell in the Fleet Prison followed by banishment from court. In the light of Herbert's well-documented reluctance to marry, Dover Wilson's speculations are attractive. He suggested that the Countess of Pembroke 'asked [Shakespeare] to meet the young lord at Wilton, on his 17th birthday', and commissioned him to compose an appropriate number of pro-marriage sonnets for the occasion.¹ This would locate sonnets 1–17 in April 1597, and suggest that Meres, in referring to Shakespeare's 'private friends', could be alluding to the Herbert family. Wilson's notion that young Herbert's tutor, Samuel Daniel, might have introduced Shakespeare to the family is also quite plausible. But in default of any supporting evidence, these can be no more than wild conjectures.

1 Wiles, passim.

2 HMC De L'Isle and Dudley, 2.478; Brennan, 101.

In any case, William Herbert's reluctance to marry, though certainly extremely apt to sonnets 1–17, constitutes only one of many arguments for his identity both with the dedicatee 'Mr. W.H.' and with the poet-speaker's 'fair friend'. That Thorpe's dedicatee is the same man as the addressee of 1–126 has often been doubted. Yet most first-time readers will naturally conflate the two. In wishing the dedicatee 'THAT. ETERNITY. / PROMISED. / BY. / OUR. EVER-LIVING. POET.' Thorpe seems to add his own support to the poet's 'ENSUING.' claims to immortalize his friend in 'black lines' (63.13). Though some have strained to interpret 'BEGETTER.' as 'procurer', the word's most obvious connotation is 'inspirer'. The poet's brain is the womb made fertile by his noble subject-matter, which brings forth sonnets as the subject's babies. An analogous application of this fairly common metaphor occurs in Sidney's Astrophil and Stella, 50, where Astrophil is in painful labour with 'thoughts' of Stella, to which he gives birth as lines of verse, 'poor babes', which he is tempted to kill for their inadequacy. Shakespeare's own Richard II, more solipsistically, attempted to identify his brain as a womb in which his own soul begets 'A generation of still-breeding thoughts' (R2 5.5.6–9).

1 Cam², c.

But even more directly applicable to the dedication of Sonnets is Sidney's dedication of the Old Arcadia to the Countess of Pembroke. He calls the Arcadia 'this child which I am loath to father'. His sister has inspired the work, by 'desiring' him to write it, so that his 'young head', womb-like, has had 'many fancies begotten in it'¹. If Herbert, the Countess of Pembroke's son, born just at the time when the Old Arcadia, too, was coming to fruition,² was 'Mr. W.H.', he would have readily picked up the allusion to his uncle's celebrated dedication, lately published anew in the 1605 Arcadia – as well as many verbal and metaphoric echoes of Sidney within the sonnets themselves (see notes). For readers proceeding into the first seventeen or eighteen sonnets, focused on the addressee's failure to become a father, there emerges an elaborate paradox. W.H. is proclaimed by Thorpe as the sonnets' 'ONLY. BEGETTER.' – but it seems that he has begotten only sonnets, not the living children who would immortalize him 'a mightier way', 'With means more blessed than my barren rhyme' (16.1–4). In what follows, therefore, I shall assume that 'Mr. W.H.' is the same individual as the original of the young man addressed and celebrated within the sonnets, and shall set out the case for his being based on William Herbert.

The financial aspect of patronage, in this period, should never be overlooked. After three years in which London's public theatres had been closed because of plague, Shakespeare must have been looking for the best reward possible for his precious sonnets. It is most improbable that he would have wished the book to be dedicated, sentimentally, to some obscure actor or sea-cook (the mythical 'Willie Hughes'), or a penniless kinsman (his infant nephew William Hart, or his presumed brother-in-law William Hathaway) – least of all to 'William Himself' or 'William [S]h[akespeare]'. None of these could offer him prestige and protection, or, most crucially, a substantial cash reward. His well-documented generosity to writers makes William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, a powerful candidate. Clarendon described him as so lavish in rewarding talented men that neither his own very large fortune nor that of his wife matched up to the exceptional liberality of his habits: rather than jockeying for favour or reward on his own behalf, he 'was still ready to promote the pretences of worthy men'¹. And according to Aubrey,

1 O.A., 3.

2 See Duncan-Jones, Sidney, 168ff.

He was the greatest Maecenas to learned Men of any Peer of his time: or since . . . He was a good Scholar, and delighted in Poetrie; and did sometimes (for his Diversion) write some Sonnets and Epigrammes.

As an exceptionally generous and intelligent patron of letters, and even something of a poet, Herbert was a worthy heir to his uncle Philip Sidney. Unlike Sidney, he had the resources, or at least the credit-rating, to support his lavishness. For instance, during the very year of Q, 1609, he gave a hundred pounds for the purchase of books to the newly founded Bodleian Library in Oxford.² He was already living and giving considerably beyond his means. Two letters to Sir Michael Hicks, one in May 1609, one in November, show him appealing for renewal of Hicks's loan to him of £1,800.³ Hicks seems to have been quite happy to do this, for this was the year in which Pembroke's public career, initially slow to develop, really took off. On 27 May 1609 he was incorporated as a member of the King's Virginia Company of London.⁴ By 1618 he was the largest individual investor in the company, with a stake of £400.⁵ A response to news of this high-profile commitment, in the very week of Q's registration with the Stationers' Company, may be discerned in Thorpe's image of himself as 'THE. WELL-WISHING. /

1 Quoted in Cam², cxxi.

2 Bodleian Benefactors' Register.

3 BL MS Lansdowne 91, fols 45, 143.

4 CSP Dom. 1603-10, 515.

5 Brennan, 149.

ADVENTURER. IN. / SETTING. / FORTH.' While Thorpe was an 'adventurer in setting forth' in the sense that he made an investment, and took a risk, in 'setting forth', or publishing, 'THESE. ENSUING. SONNETS.', Herbert was now committed to a much more exciting kind of 'setting forth' – expeditions to explore and colonize the New World. While Thorpe was an 'adventurer', or investor, in books, Herbert was an 'adventurer' in ships, men and commodities. And while the name 'Virginia' alluded to the colony's origins in the previous reign, that of the Virgin Queen, the form of Herbert's own name, 'Mr. W.H.', alluded to the period before his father's death in January 1600/1, as the time when, not yet either an earl, or of age, or married, the youthful Herbert had 'begotten' the ensuing sonnets, in particular 1–17.

Much has been made of the supposed impropriety of an earl's being addressed as 'Mr.', though Chambers did not feel that 'in such a document there would be anything very out of the way . . . in the suppression of an actual or courtesy title'.¹ If 'W.H.' denotes William Herbert, one obvious function of the 'Mr.' would be to indicate that the sonnets dedicated to him had their origin, or 'begetting', in the period before his inheritance of the Earldom of Pembroke. Rather as William Alexander had stressed on the title-page the fact that his sonnet sequence Aurora (1604) contained 'the first fancies of the Authors youth', the 'Mr.' may have indicated the pre-1601 conception of Shakespeare's Sonnets. My conjecture is that when Shakespeare left London for Stratford in some haste at the end of May 1609 he left instructions with Thorpe to use this form of address to Herbert, and to set out the dedication in pointed capitals. Though the initials of 'T.T.' are at the bottom, and the over-rhetorical wording is evidently Thorpe's, the dedication, like the text itself, had Shakespeare's authority.

Both Shakespeare and Thorpe might reasonably have looked to Pembroke's generosity to make their venture worthwhile. If

1 Chambers, Shakespeare, 1.566.

Nashe, as we now know, was given a reward of £5 for dedicating Christs Teares over Jerusalem (1593) to Lady Carey,¹ it seems unlikely that Pembroke would have paid any less for the dedication of Shakespeare's Sonnets. Indeed, given Pembroke's well-attested munificence, he may have paid more. Something between £5 and £10 might be a reasonable guess. The effort expended by Shakespeare and Thorpe in gaining a reward of this magnitude should be compared with the rather different effort that Shakespeare was also investing, at just this time, in recovering the sum of £6, with 24s interest, from his debtor John Addenbrooke (see above, p. 12).

The dedication of the First Folio plays to Pembroke and his brother by Shakespeare's 'fellows' Heminge and Condell in 1623 alludes to the Herbert brothers as having 'prosequuted both them, and their Author living, with so much fauour'. No doubt they too hoped for, and gained, good rewards from Pembroke and his brother. If they were aware that Sonnets had not only been authorized by Shakespeare himself – no 'stolne, and surreptitious copy', this – but that it had also been dedicated to Herbert, their momentous decision, whose long-term consequence has been the marginalization of all Shakespeare's non-dramatic work, to gather up plays only, would be fully explained. Pembroke did not need to have the sonnets presented to him if they were his already. Heminge and Condell's account of Shakespeare as 'parent' of the plays which are now 'Orphanes' may echo T.T.'s imagery of W.H. as 'begetter' of the sonnets.

The mock-lapidary form of the dedication, centred, and set out in capitals with a stop after each word, but in English (see Fig. 4), may allude to two recent works by Ben Jonson. Both had been published by Thorpe. The 1607 'BEN: IONSON his / VOLPONE' (note the genitive form of title, analogous to 'SHAKE-SPEARES SONNETS') has on the title-page verso a centred, capitalized dedication to 'THE TWO FAMOVS

1 Duncan-Jones, 'Nashe'.

VNIVERSITIES' by 'BEN. IONSON / THE GRATEFVLL ACKNOWLEDGER' (see Fig. 5) – a phrase mimicked in Thorpe's description of himself as 'THE. WELL-WISHING. / ADVENTURER.' For the Latinate device of placing a point after each capitalized word, but with an English text, the model was perhaps the consuls' proclamation in Act 5 of Sejanus his Fall, not centred, but capitalized and pointed. Since Jonson's learned tragedy Sejanus appears to have been written partly in response to Shakespeare's less learned Julius Caesar, Shakespeare may in turn have looked closely at it, echoing and appropriating some of its most portentously learned-seeming accoutrements. And Jonson, in turn, may have responded to the dedication of Shakespeare's Sonnets. As Dowden and others have observed, Jonson's 1616 dedication of his Epigrammes to the Earl of Pembroke opens rather oddly. After a centred and capitalized dedication 'TO . . . WILLIAM / EARLE OF PEMBROKE, / L. CHAMBERLAYNE, &c.', his epistle begins:

MY LORD. While you cannot change your merit, I dare not change your title: It was that made it, and not I. Vnder which name, I here offer to your Lo: the ripest of my studies, my Epigrammes; which though they carry danger in the sound, doe not therefore seeke your shelter: For, when I made them, I had nothing in my conscience, to expressing of which I did need a cypher.¹

Jonson's stress on his adoption of a correct and unalterable 'title' – 'MY LORD' – under which to address Pembroke certainly sounds like a side-swipe at some other writer who has had the temerity to change it; and his assertion that the ensuing poems, though epigrams, a genre often regarded as dangerously personal or satirical, are in fact not so, may also allude to some other, more compromising or 'dangerous' form of poetry, which had indeed required the use of 'a cypher'. If this passage does indeed refer to

1 Jonson, 8.25.

TO. THE. ONLIE. BEGETTER. OF.
THESE. INSVING. SONNETS.
M^r. W. H. ALL. HAPPINESSE.
AND. THAT. ETERNITIE.
PROMISED.

BY.

OVR. EVER-LIVING. POET.

WISHETH

THE. WELL-WISHING.

ADVENTVRER. IN.

SETTING.

FORTH.

T. T.

4 Dedication leaf of the 1609 Quarto (Bodleian Malone 34, title-page verso)

15

TO THE MOST NOBLE

AND MOST EQVALL SISTERS

THE TWO FAMOVS VNIVERSITIES,

FOR THEIR LOVB

AND ACCEPTANCE

SHEWN TO HIS. POEME

IN THE PRESENTATION:

Ben Jonson

THE GRATEVLL ACKNOWLEDGED

Diagrams

Both Diagrams

There follows an Epistle, & yourdare venture on the length,

5 Dedication leaf of Ben Jonson's Volpone (1607) (Bodleian Malone 225[4])

Shakespeare's Sonnets and its dedication, the phrase 'nothing in my conscience' also suggests that Jonson may have been one of the first of many readers to feel that Shakespeare's sonnets are morally compromising, and that the 'public manners' (111.4) that prompted him to publish his devotion to a young nobleman as a 'lovely boy' deserved rebuke. Shakespeare had committed a faux pas comparable with that of his own Falstaff when he addresses King Henry as 'my sweet boy' in front of the assembled court and echoes Daniel's Rosamond in appealing to him as 'My King! My Jove!' (2H4 5.5.42, 46).

If Shakespeare's patron and friend was Pembroke, Shakespeare was not alone in celebrating his beauty as well as his high birth and munificence. Francis Davison prefaced his courtly miscellany A Poetical Rhapsody, originally printed in 1602 but augmented and reprinted in 1608, with a sonnet praising Pembroke's 'lovely' 'shape' as well as his Sidneian ancestry. I quote the slightly revised 1608 text, since this immediately precedes the publication of Sonnets:

Great Earle, whose brave Heroicke minde is higher
 And nobler, then thy noble high Degree:
 Whose outward shape, though it most lovely be Doth in faire Robes a fairer Soule attier:
 Who rich in fading wealth, in endlesse Treasure
 Of Vertue, Valour, Learning, richer art:
 Whose present greatnes, men esteeme but part
 Of what by line of future Hope they measure.
 Thou worthy Sonne unto a peerelesse Mother,
 Or Nephew to great Sidney of renowne,
 Who has deserv'd thy Coronet, to crowne
 With Lawrel crowne: a crown excelling th'other
 I Consecrate these Rimes to thy great Name,
 Which if thou like, they seeke no other fame.¹

1 Francis Davison, A Poetical Rapsodie (1608), sig. A2^r. Cf. also John Davies of Hereford, Wittes Pilgrimage (?1605), sig. Q2^r.

Henry Brown, the only scholar to have proposed Francis Davison as a candidate for the 'rival poet', has been dismissed with utter contempt and disbelief.¹ Yet in certain respects Davison seems a distinct possibility. A Poetical Rhapsody is partly composed of poems by himself, his brother Walter and a friend veiled under the label 'Anomos': these two fellow poets could possibly be alluded to as 'his compeers by night' (86.7). The subtext of the miscellany, both in 1602 and in 1608, was its passionate plea on behalf of Francis Davison's father, William, briefly Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, but cast into disgrace after his delivery of the warrant for the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots. As the son of an eminent statesman, even a fallen one, Francis Davison enjoyed a far higher social status than Shakespeare, and in the latter's eyes may have appeared 'a better spirit' (80.2). William Davison, who had been a distinguished agent in Scotland and the Netherlands, was still alive in 1608,² and still banished from court: he could possibly have been alluded to as his eldest son's 'affable familiar ghost' who – a retired spy of Walsingham's – 'nightly gulls him with intelligence' (86.9–10).

Yet it must be acknowledged that John Davies of Hereford, Samuel Daniel, George Chapman and Ben Jonson are all also plausible candidates for the role of 'rival poet'. All were protégés of Pembroke, and any or all might have been viewed by Shakespeare as offering a threat or competition to him in the pursuit of Pembroke's favour. Davies, for instance, included a poem to Pembroke in Wittes Pilgrimage, in which he is addressed as 'Faire featurd Soule! well-shapen Spright!'³ Also, as suggested above, some individual sonnets appear to reflect friendly competition between Shakespeare and Drayton, who seems not to have numbered Pembroke among his patrons. Perhaps, indeed, the 'rival poet' is a composite figure, and the mini-sequence 76–86 should be seen as exploring the theme of the speaker-poet's

1 Rollins, 1.284.

2 He died in his house in Stepney about 21 December 1608.

3 John Davies of Hereford, Wittes Pilgrimage, sig. Q2^{r-v}.

sense of being threatened by other poets through a fictionally amalgamated writer, drawing on several individuals, rather than as embodying any single thread of allusion.

Conclusive evidence for a particular friendship between Shakespeare and Pembroke is lacking. No reliance can be placed, unfortunately, on W.J.Cory's account of a letter from the Countess of Pembroke (his mother) containing the sentence 'We have the man Shakespeare with us'.¹ Yet the circumstantial evidence is plentiful. There is no doubt that Pembroke favoured plays and players; he is documented as giving frequent and generous help to Ben Jonson, whose career was in so many ways parallel to Shakespeare's; he was rising high, and a conspicuous target for those seeking patronage, in 1609; his personal initials were W.H.; Thomas Thorpe openly dedicated a further work to him in 1610, applying to him the unusually intimate epithets 'gracefull' and 'sweete';² and he was to be the prime dedicatee of the First Folio.

Two further documents, while not clinching the case, suggest strongly that some degree of unconventional intimacy between Pembroke and a celebrated playwright and actor is at least within the bounds of possibility. On 6 August 1604 Giovanni Scaramelli, Venetian Secretary in England, sent the Doge and Senate a detailed eyewitness account of James I's coronation. He describes the coronation procession; the King's arrival at the Abbey, under a canopy supported by four rods with silver bells hanging from them; the disrobing and anointing; the coronation itself; and then the oaths of allegiance made by the peers. Each earl in turn advanced, knelt before the King, and kissed his hand, and in some cases also the crown. Then, in an account which singles out very few individuals by name, Scaramelli comes out with a startling anecdote:

1 Brennan 224.

2 J.H., trans., St. Augustine of the City of God (entered in the Stationers' Register in 1608), printed by George Eld (1610), sig. A3; cf. also the second edition of John Healey's Epictetus his Manuell (1616), floridly dedicated to Pembroke by Thorpe.

The Earl of Pembroke, a handsome youth, who is always with the King, and always joking with him, actually kissed his Majesty's face, whereupon the King laughed and gave him a little cuff.¹

Scaramelli's word, schiaffetto, is a diminutive of schiaffo, defined by John Florio as 'a cuffe, a buffet, a box, a whirret or clap with a hand on the cheeke'.² Pembroke's extraordinary boldness in making such a public display of his personal intimacy with the King suggests a remarkable degree of social and physical self-confidence. Like the youth of sonnet 20, whose epicene beauty 'steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth', Pembroke seems to have combined a career as a determined womanizer with an enthusiastic participation in the homosocial familiarities of James and his minions. This may have enabled him also to move easily and affably among the King's players.

A further document testifies to the depth of his affection for one of these in particular, Richard Burbage, who surely qualifies for the status of 'best friend' to Shakespeare. On 20 May 1619 Pembroke wrote a letter to Viscount Doncaster, then ambassador to Germany, who had 'Mr. Doctor Dunn' among his companions. The occasion for the letter's being written at all lay in the recent death of Burbage. The Duke of Lennox was entertaining the departing French ambassador to 'a great supper',

& even now all the company are at the play, which I being tender harted could not endure to see so soone after the loss of my old acquaintance Burbadg.³

Burbage had died on 9 March, so Pembroke's grief was sustained for well over two months. He may indeed have felt more devastated by Burbage's death than by that of Queen Anne, which had occurred a few days earlier. Like the coronation incident, this autograph letter reveals Pembroke as a man quite ready to step out of line at grand court occasions for the sake of particular affections and allegiances. Just as his full-frontal kiss of James sounds to have been a public display of a particularly close relationship, so Pembroke's absence from the play in the Great Chamber at Whitehall appears to have been a deliberate signal of his special personal affection for the leading actor of the age. It was a public display of a private loss: otherwise why would he tell Doncaster about it? No doubt he also made it clear to his court companions that grief was the reason for his refusal to watch the play, thus underlining the fact that he knew Burbage better than they did. Rather strikingly, the play performed that night was Pericles.¹ Pembroke's 'tender harted' recollection of the dead Burbage may also have encompassed sad memories of this play's chief author, Shakespeare, dead three years earlier.

1 CSP Venetian 1603-7, 77. The original reads: 'Et fra questi il Conte di Pemruch, giovane gratioso et che sta sempre col Rè e su i scherzi, basciò anco la faccia a Sua Maesta, che si pose a rider a gli diede un schiaffetto.'

2 John Florio, Queen Anna's New World of Words (1611).

3 BL MS Egerton 2592, fols. 81-2.

For the purposes of Shakespeare's Sonnets, however, the important point here is that Pembroke was prepared to receive and express affection in an individual and somewhat unconventional way. It is by no means unthinkable that he had been on terms of some intimacy with Burbage's colleague Shakespeare. Though Jonson may have liked to think that Shakespeare and Thorpe's address to him as 'Mr.' was a solecism, this could in truth have reflected their awareness that Pembroke was a man who positively enjoyed breaching protocol in the cause of friendship.

Finally, it appears that Pembroke perused and responded to Shakespeare's Sonnets. One of his own poems, the lyric initiating his debate about love with Benjamin Rudyerd, opens with a verbal and thematic elaboration of Shakespeare's sonnet 116, 'Let me not to the marriage of true minds', and incorporates the phrase 'love is not love':

1 Bentley, 7.31.

If her disdain least change in yow can move
yow doe not love for while your hope, giue fuell to your fyer, yow feel desire
Love is not love, but given free,
And soe is mine, soe should yours bee.¹

Once it is accepted that the publication of Q was authorized by Shakespeare, and that it was in the Jacobean period that he put the sequence into its final form, an identification of Pembroke as the dedicatee and addressee of Sonnets becomes overwhelmingly attractive. If some of the ‘fair youth’ sonnets, or versions of them, were written as early as 1592–5, these may indeed have been originally associated with Southampton, dedicatee of the narrative poems in 1593 and 1594. But as completed and published in 1609 the sequence strongly invites a reference to Pembroke.

RECEPTION AND CRITICISM

Reception

The early history of Shakespeare’s Sonnets is not quite ‘a blank’ (TN 2.4.110), but nearly so. Whereas the early narrative poems were received with immediate enthusiasm, prompting dozens of early allusions, citations and imitations, the 1609 Q seems to have been greeted largely in silence – a silence the more surprising given Shakespeare’s literary celebrity in 1609, in contrast to his relative obscurity in 1593–4. A few tiny pieces of evidence suggest that this silence may have been stunned or disappointed. Early readers, like later ones, may have found the collection disconcerting, disappointing or even shocking. What may be an oblique disparagement by Ben Jonson has already been quoted (see above, p. 61). The annotator of the Rosenbach copy, whose comment after the final sonnet, 154, was ‘What a heap of wretched Infidel Stuff’, has also been cited. Likewise, an early-seventeenth-century reader of the 1 Huntington MS HM 198, fol. 138^r.

Steevens-Huntington copy has made many marks which look vaguely hostile or critical, and one which clearly is: 129, the sonnet on the compulsive force of lust, has been entirely scored out.

Young Jacobean writers whom we might expect to have responded with eager excitement to the long-awaited appearance of a sonnet sequence by Shakespeare seem not to have done so. John Donne, for instance, must surely have studied Sonnets closely, yet there are very few verbal links to demonstrate that he did so. Though Milton contributed a commendatory poem to the Second Folio edition of the plays in 1632, there is no clear evidence that he ever read Shakespeare's Sonnets, unless his dismissal of 'a star-ypointing pyramid' as an adequate monument carries some reference to the speaker's dismissal of 'pyramids' in 123; but this seems rather tenuous. Indeed, some of Sonnets's influence may have been negative, provoking a younger generation of poets to turn to the devotional themes that Shakespeare had so conspicuously neglected.

It is striking that George Herbert's New Year letter to his mother, incorporating two sonnets in which he asks why contemporary poets celebrate none but secular love-objects, belongs to the winter of 1609–10. Young George Herbert – a cousin, if the Pembrokian hypothesis is correct, of 'Mr. W.H.' – may have been shocked to find the leading dramatist of the age giving his name to a collection of poems part homoerotic, part cynically heterosexual in their preoccupations, and virtually never spiritual, and addressing them under a thin disguise to his noble kinsman. Herbert's two sonnets make good sense as a shocked response to Q by the pious and ambitious 17-year-old:

My God, where is that ancient heat towards thee,
Wherewith whole shoals of Martyrs once did burn,
Besides their other flames? Doth Poetry
Wear Venus livery? only serve her turn?
Why are not Sonnets made of thee?¹

1 Herbert, 206.

The second sonnet seems to offer rewritings of specific images in Shakespeare's Sonnets. For Shakespeare's repeated image of human procreation as 'distillation' (5) Herbert has

Each Cloud distils thy praise, and doth forbid
Poets to turn it to another use.

For Shakespeare's image of the 'crystal eyes' of those who seek to look into his heart (46.6), Herbert has

Why should I Women's eyes for Chrystal take?

And in the three lines which follow he may be responding to Shakespeare's repeated references to his own poor or 'blunt' 'invention' (38.8; 59.3; 76.6; 103.7; 105.11):

Such poor invention burns in their low mind
Whose fire is wild, and doth not upward go
To praise, and on thee, Lord, some Ink bestow.

Possibly the publication of Shakespeare's Sonnets was one of the factors that provoked George Herbert to embark on the programme of reclamation of secular poetic rhetoric that was to emerge as The Temple.

When Herbert wrote those two sonnets to his mother he was in his first year as a Cambridge undergraduate. Students at Oxford and Cambridge and the Inns of Court had been just the category of readers who had responded most warmly to Venus and Adonis – so much so as to be mocked for their enthusiasm in the Parnassus Plays and elsewhere. Yet responses to Sonnets seem to have been more muted. One recent Oxford graduate, Leonard Digges, appears to have been a would-be devotee. He inscribed the flyleaf of a copy of Lope de Vega's Rimas (Madrid, 1613) with a commendation of 'this Booke of Sonets, which with Spaniards here is accounted of their Lope de Vega as in Englande we sholde of our Will Shakespeare'.¹ The volume itself was a gift from James Mabbe, a Hispanist, and Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, to one 'Will Baker'. Mabbe and Digges were both to contribute commendatory verses to the First Folio. Paul Morgan has taken Digges's note as evidence 'that in 1613 or 1614 men interested in literature regarded Shakespeare's poems as the supreme achievement in contemporary poetry'.¹ Yet it can be construed in just the opposite way. Digges's phrase 'as in Englande we sholde of our Will Shakespeare' – note 'we sholde', not 'we do' – could indicate that in Digges's view Englishmen ought to be as proud of the dramatist Shakespeare's sonnets as Spaniards are of those of the dramatist Lope de Vega, but that, regrettably, they are not.

1 Morgan, 118.

As stepson to Shakespeare's Stratford friend Thomas Russell, Digges was probably acquainted with Shakespeare, and may have felt especially bound to champion all his works, including Sonnets. Yet it is noticeable that neither in his commendatory poem prefixed to the First Folio, nor in the longer one, possibly composed for a later Folio, but appropriated by Benson for his 1640 Poems, does Digges make any allusion to Shakespeare's non-dramatic work. The evidence for Shakespeare's power as 'a Poet', Digges claims in the second poem, lies in the continued enthusiasm of theatre audiences, and specifically in their preference for revivals of Shakespeare's plays rather than Jonson's. Indeed, in comparing the esteem in which Lope de Vega's sonnets are held with that of 'our Will Shakespeare', Digges may be including himself in a large class of English readers who ought to think highly of Shakespeare's Sonnets but find it difficult to do so, however much, out of both personal and national loyalty, they may want to champion their merits.

The only early-seventeenth-century writer who can be shown to have read Q attentively and appreciatively is Sir John Suckling. He incorporated half a dozen verbal reminiscences in his tragedy Brennoralt (written about 1640). Some are sensuous images, like the phrase ‘buds of marjoram’ (99.7) which he includes in a catalogue of the irresistible beauties of ‘a sprightly girle about fifteen’.¹ Other passages appropriate more elaborate conceits, like the dying Iphigene’s lines to Almerin, the man she loves –

1 Ibid., 119–20.

For I like testie sickmen at their death,
Would know no newes but health from the Physitian²

– adapted from 140.7–8:

As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know . . .

It is rather striking that virtually all of the reminiscences of Sonnets occur in speeches by Iphigene, a woman disguised – not transiently, but throughout her life – as a man. Early in the play, in an echo not noted either by Rollins or by Suckling’s editors, Iphigene echoes the old man in A Lover’s Complaint, ‘Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew / Of court, of city’; compare Iphigene’s

O Almerin; would we had never knowne
The ruffle of the world!³

She continues with a lament for those youthful joys which

Like glorious Mornings, are retir’d into Darke sullen clouds

echoing Shakespeare’s 33.1,

Full many a glorious morning have I seen . . .

The death of her female friend Francelia, supposed her mistress, is marked with the lines

1 Suckling, Plays, 222.

2 Ibid., 230; not noted by Beaurline as a Shakespearean reminiscence.

3 Ibid., 194.

Shee's gone. Life like a Dials hand hath stolne
From the faire figur e're it was perceiv'd¹

echoing two of Shakespeare's tenderest lines about the fair youth (104.9–10):

Ah, yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived . . .

Suckling's ascription of so many lines and images from Sonnets to a transvestite character suggests that, like other early readers, he took full note of the sequence's sexual ambivalence – of the male addressee of 1–126, the 'master mistress' of the speaker's 'passion' – but that, unlike most readers, he enjoyed its unconventionality and gender confusion, making an inventive application of it in his play. There is little evidence that Brennoralt achieved any fame before the closing of the theatres in 1642, but it was performed six or seven times in the Restoration period, and was seen several times by Pepys. In 1661 he declared that 'It seemed a good play, but ill acted', and in 1667 he called it 'a good tragedy that I like well'². But it is unlikely that Pepys, or any members of Restoration audiences, recognized some of the most touching lines in the play as quotations from Shakespeare's Sonnets.

Strangely, Benson's 1640 edition had far more literary influence than Thorpe's quarto. Perhaps because it was itself a 'miscellany', it was drawn on heavily by other anthologists and compilers of poetical miscellanies, such as Joshua Poole and Milton's nephew Edward Phillips.³ Like Benson, these writers heterosexualized the poems. Phillips, for instance, cobbled together a series of final couplets from the 'fair youth' sonnets under the title 'A Perswasive Letter to his Mistress.'⁴ Such unacknowledged pillagings did little for Shakespeare's reputation

1 Ibid., 231.

2 Bentley, 5.1207–9.

3 Joshua Poole, Englands Parnassus (1657); Edward Phillips, The Mysteries of Love and Eloquence (1658); for a fuller account, see Rollins, 2.329ff.

4 Phillips, op. cit., 138–9.

as a non-dramatic poet, and may have contributed to the steady decline of interest in or appreciation of Sonnets during the eighteenth century. In the case of the Shakespeare scholar George Steevens, neglect was compounded by positive hostility. To Edmond Malone's admirable Supplement to Johnson's Shakespeare, Steevens appended savage annotations in which he reviled the sonnet form in general, and the 'labour'd perplexities' of Shakespeare's sonnets in particular.¹ Hostility to Shakespeare became tangled up with jealousy of Malone, undoubtedly the better scholar, and in his 1793 edition of the Plays Steevens roundly declared:

We have not reprinted the Sonnets, &c. of Shakspeare, because the strongest act of Parliament that could be framed, would fail to compel readers into their service; notwithstanding these miscellaneous Poems have derived every possible advantage from the literature and judgement of their only intelligent editor, Mr. Malone . . . Had Shakspeare produced no other works than these, his name would have reached us with as little celebrity as time has conferred on . . . that of Thomas Watson, an older and much more elegant sonneteer.²

Though the vehemence with which Steevens attacked both sonnets and Sonnets was exceptional, a degree of neglect and hostility was commonplace. Indeed, Malone himself, though calmly scholarly in his printed remarks, evidently found Shakespeare's Sonnets extremely baffling, as is revealed by an amusing drawing (see Fig. 6). The paucity of Malone's comments on Sonnets appears also to reflect this puzzlement.

In succeeding decades distaste and confusion were widespread. Wordsworth eventually changed his mind. In 1806 he

1 Malone, I.606 and passim.

2 Quoted in Rollins, 2.337–8. For a fuller account of Malone's differences with Steevens over Shakespeare's non-dramatic poems, see Martin, 44–7.

Mr. Mevius borrowed this volume from me in 1779, to peruse the Rape of Lucrece in the original edition, of which he was not possessed. When he returned it, he made ~~the~~ this drawing. I was then confined by a sore throat, and attended by Mr. Affricorn the Apothecary, of whom the above figure whom Shakspeare addresses, is a caricature.

L. M.

wrote contemptuously of ‘the Sonnet’s scanty plot of ground’, but in a sonnet published in 1827 he implored critics to ‘Scorn not the Sonnet’ with which ‘Shakespeare unlocked his heart’. Coleridge, however, remained uncomfortable, despite continuing to deploy the sonnet form himself. In his fourth Shakespeare lecture (28 November 1811) he discussed the narrative poems, but made no reference whatsoever to Sonnets. In 1818 he remarked in passing, in the course of a lecture on Donne, that Shakespeare ‘is never positively bad, even in his Sonnets’. Near the end of his life, in May 1833, he had apparently moderated his hostility a little, in a defence that sheds light on his previous distaste. He acknowledged that

I believe it possible that a man may, under certain states of the moral feeling, entertain something deserving the name of love towards a male object – an affection beyond friendship, and wholly aloof from appetite.

But he went on to exonerate Shakespeare from any such ‘love’, claiming that

It seems to me that the sonnets could only have come from a man deeply in love, and in love with a woman; and there is one sonnet which, from its incongruity, I take to be a purposed blind.¹

1 Coleridge, 2.355–6.

6 Drawings by George Steevens and Edmond Malone inscribed on the verso of the first flyleaf of SHAKE-SPEARES SONNETS (1609). Steevens borrowed the book from Malone in 1779, and returned it to Malone with the roundel portrait of Shakespeare added on a tipped-in strip of paper. Malone, then ill with a sore throat, added a caricature of Mr Atkinson, his apothecary, startled at the words that Malone has caused to issue from Shakespeare’s mouth: ‘If thou could’st, Doctor, cast the water of my sonnets, find their dis-eas[e,] or purge my editor till he understood them I would applaud thee &c’ (Bodleian Arch. Gd. 41)

Why Shakespeare, if deeply in love with a woman, should have misled readers by including 'a purposed blind' (presumably 20, 'A woman's face . . .'), Coleridge does not explain. In her screenplay of Jane Austen's Sense and Sensibility (1995) Emma Thompson shows Willoughby and Marianne as each equipped with a little volume of Shakespeare's Sonnets.¹ Though this scene works well as a visual signal of the natural erotic and literary sympathy between the young people, it is wholly anachronistic, for in 1811 no such dainty edition existed, nor was relish for Sonnets at all usual in the early nineteenth century.

Coleridge's rather confused suggestion that, though 'love towards a male object' could on occasion be acceptable, no such love lay behind Sonnets, found little support. Severer critics, like Henry Hallam in 1839, perceived that they were indeed emotionally abnormal, and condemned them as such:

There is a weakness and folly in all excessive and misplaced affection, which is not redeemed by the touches of nobler sentiments that abound in this long series of sonnets . . . so many frigid conceits are scattered around, that we might almost fancy the poet to have written without genuine emotion, did not a host of other passages attest the contrary.²

Though Tennyson undoubtedly modelled his sequence of elegies for Henry Hallam's son Arthur, In Memoriam (1850), closely on Sonnets, both he and his friends were determined, in later years, to play down this connection. Benjamin Jowett, for instance, presented Tennyson's devotion to Shakespeare's Sonnets as an immature error of judgement, brought on by the shock of Arthur Hallam's death:

in his weaker moments, [Tennyson] . . . used to think Shakespeare greater in his sonnets than in his plays. But he soon returned to the thought which is indeed the thought of all the world. He would have seemed to me to be reverting for a moment to the great sorrow of his own mind. It would not have been manly or natural to have lived in it always . . . The love of the sonnets which he so strikingly expressed was a sort of sympathy with Hellenism.¹

1 Emma Thompson, Sense and Sensibility: The Screenplay (1995), 61–2, 82.

2 Quoted in Rollins, 2.359.

Jowett's final allusion to 'Hellenism' – here an unconvincing euphemism for 'Greek love', or homoeroticism – shows that he was unable to pretend to himself, as Coleridge had done, that the whole sequence was inspired by love for a woman.

Thanks to such careful propaganda, the Poet Laureate's aberrant devotion to Sonnets could be both condoned and explained. No such reclamation could be achieved in the case of Oscar Wilde. His charmed fascination with them, and his invocation of them in his own defence on the final day of his third trial, in May 1895, had a lasting, and deeply inhibiting, effect on their subsequent reception. Indeed, Wilde himself, in the penultimate year of his life, showed some awareness of this. He wrote to a school-boy in March 1899:

My dear Boy . . . So you love Shakespeare's Sonnets: I have loved them, as one should love all things, not wisely but too well. In an old Blackwood – of I fancy 1889 – you will find a story of mine called 'The Portrait of Mr. W.H.', in which I have expressed a new theory about the wonderful lad whom Shakespeare so deeply loved. I think it was the boy who acted in his plays.²

Contrary to Emma Thompson's fantasy in which shared appreciation of Shakespeare's Sonnets serves to reinforce heterosexual attraction, Wilde's letter makes it clear that a taste for this work was in his eyes a promising trait in an attractive young man. In the year of this letter, 1899, the explicit association of Sonnets with pederasty was compounded further by Samuel Butler, who for Wilde's boy actor Willie Hews substituted an old sea-cook of the same name,¹ thus helping to make such readings ridiculous, as well as (according to the values of the time) morally compromising. Many of those who have tried to integrate Sonnets into Shakespeare's biography in the twentieth century have followed Coleridge in energetically promoting a myth of a woman – the 'dark lady' – as the chief inspirer of Shakespeare's work. Sometimes contemporaries detected the element of obfuscation or humbug in this. Max Beerbohm, for instance, drew an outrageous caricature of the diminutive womanizer Frank Harris deviating from the habits of a lifetime in order to respond to advances from his great hero Shakespeare – 'Had Shakespeare asked me . . .', though in another (see Fig. 7) he showed 'William Shakespeare writing a sonnet' while gazing knock-kneed at a young courtier embracing a lady.

1 Quoted in Tennyson, 2.313.

2 Wilde, Letters, 789.

A final example may illustrate the complex manner in which interpretation of Shakespeare's Sonnets almost always becomes entwined with the personality (and sexuality) of the critic, as well as his or her cultural location. This is the case of W.H. Auden. Though anyone with a knowledge of Auden's biography might expect him to celebrate and endorse the homoerotic character of 1–126, he was absolutely determined not to do so, at least publicly. In his 1964 Signet edition Auden claimed – as G. Wilson Knight had done² – that the primary experience explored in Sonnets was 'mystical', and he was extremely scathing about putative readers of homosexual inclinations who might be 'determined to secure our Top-Bard as a patron saint of the Homintern'. Yet his public adoption of this position seems to have been a characteristic instance of Auden's cowardice, for later in 1964 he confessed to friends that a public account of

1 Rollins, 2.182–3.

2 Knight, passim.

7 Drawing by Max Beerbohm of 'William Shakespeare writing a sonnet' (1907) (courtesy of Mrs Reichmann)

Shakespeare (evidently equated by Auden with the speaker in Sonnets) as homosexual 'won't do just yet'¹. Perhaps Auden was referring to the changes in legislation then under discussion: Parliament finally decriminalized homosexual acts between consenting adults in July 1967.² Consequent changes in attitude have also been slow to take effect. Not until the American Joseph Pequigney's Such Is My Love in 1985 was a homoerotic reading of Shakespeare's Sonnets positively and systematically championed.³

1 Pequigney, 79–80.

2 For a concise account of the reform of legislation relating to homosexuality in Britain, see Hyde, Other Love, 255–97.

3 But see also S. C. Campbell's Only Begotten Sonnets, a homoerotic interpretation (2 vols, 1979)

Criticism

Though not all twentieth-century critics may have been fully conscious of this, a fear that a personal interpretation of the ‘young man’ sonnets might link Shakespeare, or even the love of Shakespeare – as in the case of Wilde – with criminalized activity seems to have operated as a powerful disincentive. Most serious critics and scholars have studiously resisted, or side-stepped, the temptation to connect Sonnets with Shakespeare’s own life and personality. All three of the most distinguished post-war editors have dodged the issue. Ingram and Redpath were the most daring, in their brief comment on our general impression, which is that the relationship was one of profound and at times agitated friendship, which involved a certain physical and quasi-sexual fascination emanating from the young friend and enveloping the older poet, but did not necessarily include paederasty in any lurid sense.¹

Stephen Booth, in spite of his preoccupation with bawdy puns, was determined not to get involved: ‘William Shakespeare was almost certainly homosexual, bisexual or heterosexual. The sonnets provide no evidence on the matter.’² Though working as recently as the mid-1980s, John Kerrigan also side-stepped the possibility that Sonnets could offer any reflection of Shakespeare’s own predilections. He speaks of the ‘sonnets to the youth’ as arising ‘out of comradely affection in the literature of friendship’ (Sidney Lee lives!). He goes on to refer dismissively to ‘innumerable crackpot theories about the poet’s life and love-life – fantasies in which the Sonnets have played a large part’.³ Earlier twentieth-century scholars tended to concentrate, instead, on such matters as Shakespeare’s adaptations of classical myth, verbal links between Sonnets and the plays, or his debt to Continental sonneteers. Pooler's 1918 Arden edition is a good specimen of this tradition of scholarship, and J.B. Leishman's Themes and Variations in Shakespeare's Sonnets (1961) represents one of its major achievements, offering a richly learned contextualization of such images and tropes as immortalization through verse and 'Love as the Defier of Time'.

1 IR, xi.

2 Booth, 548.

3 Kerrigan, 55, 74.

The emergence of New Criticism in the 1930s was fortunate for admirers of Shakespeare's Sonnets, for it opened up techniques of 'close reading' which were on principle decontextualized, thus prohibiting biographical reference. This approach, too, has been illuminating, especially in the hands of William Empson¹ and his followers. Indeed, this has been the dominant mode of criticism up to the present day, with Anthony Hecht's introduction to Blakemore Evans's New Cambridge edition (1996), which consists of a detailed discussion of half a dozen individual sonnets, a testimony to its robust survival.

Not one of the fifty-three editions collated by Rollins in 1944 was prepared by a woman, and of twenty-two further editions listed but not collated, only two were by women.² Yet a noticeable feature of work on Sonnets in the later twentieth century has been the high incidence of distinguished and original studies by women. Perhaps there is something particularly attractive to women readers about the enclosed space of 'the sonnet's narrow room', and its predominantly reflective, introspective subject-matter. Possibly, also, women readers are able to remain at once calmly observant of, yet emotionally receptive to, the masculine homoerotic thrust of 1–126 that has caused such upset to generations of male readers. Indeed, the place of Shakespeare's Sonnets in 'gender studies' has also been explored as much by women as by men, as in the pioneering work of Eve Sedgwick and a bold survey by Marjorie Garber. Kate Chedgzoy has explored the 1 Empson, 50–6, 133–8.

2 Rollins, 1.xi–xiv; the editions are those of C.C. Stopes (1904) and Charlotte Porter (1912).

8 Jane Lapotaire in the Channel 4 series of readings from Sonnets, 1983 vital part played by the Sonnets in Oscar Wilde's 'act of self-fashioning'. Whatever the underlying reasons, female predominance is striking. Specialized studies by Molly Mahood, Winifred Nowotny and Rosalie Colie opened up all sorts of new techniques for analysis, semantic, linguistic and generic. More recent critics of great originality have included Anne Ferry and Heather Dubrow. The ongoing work of Helen Vendler is sure to produce one of the most profoundly sensitive readings of the century.¹

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS

The title

The title of Shakespeare's sonnets is Shakespeare's Sonnets. On this point, the Stationers' Register entry and Q are quite consistent; and the appearance of 'SHAKE-SPEARES / SONNETS' as a running title in every single opening of Q also ensures that, however far a reader proceeds into the sequence, the labelling of the poems being read both as sonnets and as Shakespeare's can never get forgotten. (See Fig. 12, p. 104.) This 'genitive' title is the first of many features that wholly distinguish Shakespeare's Sonnets from other sonnet collections of the period.² The only other sequence to include the author's name in the possessive as part of the title is Syr. P.S. his Astrophel and Stella (1591), a posthumous publication, whose title, probably devised by the piratical publisher Thomas Newman, no doubt emphasizes Sidney's authorship for the purpose of publicity. However, since Astrophil and Stella was one of Shakespeare's most important models, and probably the sequence he most wished to 'overgo', this wording may have had some influence on the title of Sonnets, especially if its dedicatee was Sidney's nephew and male heir, William Herbert. There were plenty of other models for 'genitive' titles – there are well over fifty such titles for printed books in the period 1558–1640. But the application of such a title to a literary, poetic, text by a living writer is distinctly unusual.¹ Its purpose may be to draw attention to Shakespeare's fame and status. As followed by the phrase 'Neuer before Imprinted', the suggestion may be, 'Here are those sonnets of the celebrated Shakespeare for which you book-buyers have been waiting for so long.' But as repeated throughout the volume, a detail half noticed as we read on and on in this extraordinarily cryptic, yet personal-seeming, sequence of poems, the title inevitably hints that these sonnets may be about Shakespeare, as well as by him. As Coryates Crudities (1611) described the adventurous travels of Thomas Coryate, so Shakespeare's Sonnets – a first-time reader suspects – may chronicle the emotional and poetic journeyings of William Shakespeare. A literal identification of the 'I' of Sonnets with Shakespeare himself has been actively repudiated by most late-twentieth-century critics. Yet it should be acknowledged that this form of title, provided that we believe the work to be authorized, positively invites such an identification. Indeed, in referring to Shakespeare as publishing his sonnets 'in his owne name' Thomas Heywood may have been alluding to the spear-shaking wording of the title.

1 Commentary on Sonnets to be published by Harvard University Press.

2 For a useful list of these, see Roche, Appendix A.

The second work in Q also has a title defined by a possessive, but one that is interestingly different from, and complementary to, Shakespeare's Sonnets. A Lover's Complaint is heralded by its own distinct label and declaration of authorship: 'A Louers complaint. / BY / WILLIAM SHAKE-SPEARE.' (See Fig. 10). Here, a first-time reader may naturally anticipate that the 'Lover' will be male, and so perhaps close kin to 'William Shakespeare'. Although the word could be applied to women in this period (see headnote to A Lover's Complaint), such an application was extremely uncommon. Just as such a reader may have been startled to discover that the majority of the sonnets are addressed, not to a chaste lady, but to a fair youth, they will be

1 For a more detailed discussion of 'genitive' titles and their implications, see Duncan-Jones, 'Sonnets called?'

9 Ben Kingsley in the Channel 4 series of readings from Sonnets, 1983 startled afresh, probably, to learn that the complaining ‘Lover’ of this second title is female. Though Shakespeare is credited with the authorship of the poem, his fictionalized role within it, if we identify him with the ‘I’ of lines 3–4 –

My spirits t’attend this double voice accorded,
And down I laid to list the sad tuned tale

– appears to be as a listener, not a speaker. Also, since the maid is still speaking at the end, there is no indication that the poet-speaker has mediated to interpret or ‘reword’ her complaint. The poet’s distance from the complaint is also increased by the fact that the maid’s interlocutor is not the ‘I’ of the opening stanza, but ‘A reverend man, that grazed his cattle nigh’ (57). The title declares Shakespeare to be the author, yet the poem itself relegates him to the position of a mere reporter or eavesdropper, whose personal interest in the nameless maid’s narrative is left open to conjecture.

The relevance of A Lover’s Complaint

Some contrast and/or complementarity between a male-voiced sonnet sequence and an appended female-voiced ‘complaint’ was a normal feature of the two-part form. To put it crudely, the sonnet sequence explores the frustrated desire of a male lover, the ensuing complaint, in a kind of echo effect, voices the misery of a woman who is the victim of male desire. The sense of a sexual balance being redressed is particularly strong in Sonnets, where misogynistic images of a ‘dark lady’ in Sonnets 127–52 are immediately followed by the sympathetic presentation of a nameless maid. As Malone observed, the earliest Elizabethan archetype for this two-part structure was Samuel Daniel’s Delia . . . with the Complaint of Rosamund, first published in 1592.¹ The male voice of the Delia sonnets seems to develop in gentle stages from 1 According to Roche, 343, this form ‘undoubtedly’ derives from the publication of Petrarch’s Canzoniere with Trionfi. However, given Daniel’s particular devotion to the more recent poets of the French Pléiade movement, it seems possible that he found models there.

Daniel's own voice, in his dedicatory epistle to the Countess of Pembroke, to the heightened and various voice of the sonnets, with their heading 'TO DELIA'. Though Daniel's own name is not associated with his sonnets in the explicit way that Shakespeare's is with his, we should notice that 'Delia' is an anagram of 'Daniel', if the nasal 'n' of his name is represented, as it might be in manuscript, with the tilde. The close coincidence of the poet's name with that of the addressee suggests an element of narcissistic self-projection. Shakespeare may have imitated this, in so far as he introduces no named figure into his sonnets except – at the head of the page – himself, and, in 135–6, one, two or more men called 'Will'. After fifty sonnets, Daniel's Delia is rounded off with an 'Ode' in which the erotic joys of animals and hills are contrasted with the cruelty of Delia to her lover. The Complaint of Rosamund is prefaced with its own decorative, architectural title-page. Like the speakers in The Mirror for Magistrates, Rosamund appears as a ghost, who begs to have her sad tale told by Daniel's 'Muse', so that

Delia may happe to deyne to read our story,
And offer up her sigh among the rest

– thus forging an explicit link between sonnets and 'complaint': the addressee of the sonnets is to be the audience of the complaint. Unlike Shakespeare, Daniel resumes his own voice in the final stanza:

So vanisht shee, and left me to returne,
To prosecute the tenor of my woes.

He creates a complex and subtle relationship between the chastely unreceptive Delia and the scrupulous, though technically unchaste, Rosamund, over-swayed by the high rank of her lover, Henry II.

In the years immediately following the publication of Delia . . . with . . . Rosamund, many other poets developed the motif of a young person seduced or sexually threatened by a man of high rank. Shakespeare himself explored it in Lucrece (1594), a major

A Louers complaint.

BY

WILLIAM SHAKE-SPEARE.

FROM off a hill whose concaue wombe reworded,
 A plaintfull story from a fistring vale
 My spirits t'attend this doble voyce accorded,
 And downe I laid to lift the sad tun'd tale,
 Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale
 Tearing of papers breaking rings a twaine,
 Storming her world with sorrowes, wind and raine.

Vpon her head a platid hieue of straw,
 Which fortified her visage from the Sunne,
 Whereon the thought might thinke sometime it saw
 The carkas of a beauty spent and donne,
 Time had not fished all that youth begun,
 Nor youth all quit, but spight of heauens fell rage,
 Some beauty pecpt, through lettice of fear'd age.

Oft did she heaue her Napkin to her eyne,
 Which on it had conceited characters:
 Laundering the silken figures in the brine,
 That seasoned woe had pelleted in teares,
 And often reading what contents it beares:
 As often shriking vndistinguisht wo,
 In clamours of all size both high and low,

Some-times her leueld eyes their carriage ride,
 As they did batery to the spheres intend:
 Sometime diuerted their poore balls are tide,
 To th'orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend,
 Their view right on, anon their gales lend,

COMPLAINT

To every place at once and no where fixt,
 The mind and sight distractedly commixt.

Her haire nor loofe nor ti'd in formall plat,
 Proclaime'd in her a carelesse hand of pride;
 For some vntuck'd descended her sheu'd hat,
 Hanging her pale and pined cheeke beside,
 Some in her threedden fillet still did bide,
 And trew to bondage would not breake from thence,
 Though slackly braided in loofe negligence.

A thousand fauours from a maund she drew,
 Of amber christall and of bedded Ier,
 Which one by one she in a riuier threw,
 Vpon whose weeping margent she was set,
 Like vsery applying wet to wet,
 Or Monarches hands that lets not bounty fall,
 Where want cries some; but where excesse begs all.

Of folded schedulls had she many a one,
 Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore and gaue the flud,
 Crackt many a ring of Posied gold and bone,
 Bidding them find their Sepulchers in mud,
 Found yet no letters sadly pend in blood,
 With sleided silke, feate and affectedly
 Enswath'd and scald to curious secrecy.

These often bath'd she in her fluxiue ties,
 And often kist, and often gaue to teare,
 Cried O false blood thou register of lies,
 What vnapproued wicnes doost thou beare!
 Inke would haue seem'd more blacke and damned heare!
 This said in top of rage the lines she rents,
 Big discontent, so breaking their contents.

A reuerend man that graz'd his cattell ny, component of which is Lucrece's 'complaint' in lines 764–1036. Drayton developed it – with no apparent embarrassment about this story's homoeroticism – in Peirs Gaveston (1593), and also in Matilda (1594), his English counterpart to Lucrece. And as a component of a published sonnet collection, the form of complaint by a victim of sexual harassment was adopted by (among others) Thomas Lodge in his Elstred, voiced by the cast-off mistress of the Ancient British king Lochrine: this is appended to his sonnet sequence Phyllis (1593). Richard Barnfield adopted a three-part structure in his Cynthia. With Certaine Sonnets and the Legend of Cassandra (1595). Cynthia is a tribute to the Queen, in Spenserian stanzas; twenty sonnets explore the love of Daphnis for Ganymede (previously celebrated by Barnfield in The Affectionate Shepheard, 1594); and Cassandra, in sixains, explores the grief of the Trojan prophetess, seduced by Agamemnon, but unable to warn him of his doom.

K a

Some

Though rather lightweight, Barnfield's volume shares three important features with Shakespeare's Sonnets. The first is the most remarkable. Despite Sir Sidney Lee's protestations to the contrary, Barnfield is the only other Renaissance poet to address a sequence of sonnets to a 'lovely Boy'. Second, Cynthia, like Sonnets, has a male dedicatee, William Stanley, Earl of Derby. Though not unique, this is slightly unusual. Daniel's Delia, for instance, is dedicated to the Countess of Pembroke, and Lodge's Phyllis to the Countess of Shrewsbury. The third, and most puzzling, link between Cynthia and Sonnets lies in its inclusion of a poem by 'T.T. in commendation of the Authour his worke'. This writer's fondness for contorted word-order and somewhat awkward compound epithets, such as 'PEGASE foote-sprung fountain', 'ILLIONS fourth-telling SYBILLIST', 'Larke mounting Muse', makes it tempting to wonder whether this could be that same T.T. who was to describe himself as 'the well-wishing adventurer' in commending a later male-on-male sonnet sequence.¹

1 Thomas Thorpe was aged about 25 at this time. Another florid poem by 'T.T.' commends John Trussell's Raptus I. Helenae (1595).

Be that as it may, a formal connection between sonnet sequence and complaint was thoroughly established by the time Shakespeare's Sonnets was published. Scholars have been puzzled by stylistic evidence that A Lover's Complaint is a late poem, written after 1600. But if it was after 1600, and perhaps even after 1603, that Shakespeare began to marshal his sonnets, some written recently, some much longer ago, into the large-scale structure to be published in 1609, it would make perfect sense that A Lover's Complaint should have been written then as a carefully designed component of the whole. What is less immediately apparent is that A Lover's Complaint is not merely a formal pendant to the sonnets, but a carefully balanced thematic counterpart to them. What first strike the eye are the formal and stylistic contrasts between the two sections. After 153 numbered sonnets, and one six-couplet intermediate 'envoi' (126), come forty-seven unnumbered rime-royal stanzas. After the grand philosophical abstractions of the sonnets, especially those concerned with time and poetry, A Lover's Complaint appears disconcertingly detailed, concrete and inward-looking. Indeed, it is unusual among all Shakespeare's poems in its minute focus on small material objects, such as the 'plaited hive of straw' worn by the maiden on her head (8); the jewels and letters that she takes out of her handbag and throws into a stream (Fig. 11); the 'grained bat' on which her interlocutor leans (64); or the translucent 'crystal' tears that run down the young wooer's rosy cheeks (285–6). And after the single, though complex, 'I' whom we encounter in the preceding sonnets, this short poem offers dizzyingly complex layers of reported speech. The maid is overheard reporting to an old man both her own experiences, and, in fifteen stanzas, the wooing speech of her seducer, which in turn incorporates wooing stratagems of many other women.

However, the youth himself constitutes one of the strongest thematic links between A Lover's Complaint and the sonnets. Apparently a wealthy and promiscuous young courtier, he seems to be as universally admired and sought after as the fair youth of sonnets 1–126. Compare, for instance, 31.1–4:

11 The Cheapside Hoard, a collection of Elizabethan jewels (Museum of London)

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts
Which I, by lacking, have supposed dead;
And there reigns love, and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.

with Complaint 127–30:

That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old, and sexes both enchanted
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted . . .

Like the addressee of sonnets 1–126, the maiden's seducer is fascinatingly unreliable, and his unreliability is conveyed in terms of spring weather. Compare 34.1–2:

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travail forth without my cloak . . . ?

and Complaint 101–3:

Yet if men moved him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.

Also, the woman, who seems initially little more than an animated version of one of those 'many maiden gardens' which would delight in procreation with the fair youth in sonnets 1–17, turns out as the poem proceeds to have much in common with the poet-speaker of the sonnets. Not only is she, like him, in the grip of an obsessive devotion to a fair youth; like him, she is betrayed by the very words she uses. The Sonnets-speaker finds himself ultimately trapped in a web of his own poetic fabrication. In setting himself, in defiance of tradition, the paradoxical task of celebrating a dark-complexioned and unfaithful mistress, he has committed both artistic and moral treachery, as he acknowledges in 152.13–14:

For I have sworn thee fair: more perjured eye,
To swear against the truth so foul a lie.

The maid, analogously, in attempting both to justify her sexual fault and to purge herself of the weakness that led to it, discovers that in rewording the youth's wooing speeches she is captivated by them all over again. The seducer's rhetoric – not words alone, but also love-gifts and body language – is so dangerously persuasive that even in repeating it she succumbs to it once more (327–9):

O, all that borrowed motion, seeming owed,
Would yet again betray the fore-betrayed,
And new pervert a reconciled maid.

It is in this paradoxical sense that the maid of A Lover's Complaint is 'fickle'. Like the Sonnets-speaker, she is compulsively faithful to an unfaithful love-object: she knows all about that love which does not 'alter when it alteration finds' (116.3). At first she is viewed in the process of weaning herself from her seducer by breaking and throwing away all his love tokens – objects which, we later learn, were merely 'borrowed', being bestowed on him by his female admirers. But her attempt at self-purgation turns instead into reinfection. In the course of expounding the youth's treachery, which extends even to his body fluids – letters written in blood can lie, and so can tears, sighs and saliva ('that sad breath his spongy lungs bestowed', 326) – she is trapped by it once more. She proves, indeed, to be just as powerfully driven by negative and self-destructive desire as the lust-mad 'men' of sonnet 129. If we take sonnets and 'complaint' together, we can see that this book of sonnets turns out to be a book of lies and lying. It explores that negative equation according to which love is blind and poets are liars: love poets, therefore, can tell nothing but lies. Yet there is no escape from these lies.

A Lover's Complaint gathers up and complements the two negative conclusions of the sonnets. The 'lovely Boy' of sonnet 126, though temporarily triumphing over time, as the poet has claimed to do, must eventually be rendered up to age and death; and in sonnets 152–4 the poet-lover is both morally compromised and physically infected. Likewise, the 'fickle maid' is already touched by 'seared age' (14), and finds that she is unable to free herself from emotional dependence on the betraying words of her lover. Though little in the main body of Shakespeare's Sonnets appears to allude to the time of severe plague during which it was published, the 1608–9 plague may have some bearing on the images of infection both in sonnets 153–4 and in the final stanza of the Complaint, in each case alluding to an 'eye' – possibly figuring a less visible orifice – as a locus for 'infected moisture' (LC 323). Neither emotionally nor physically, it seems, can human desire be escaped. And though poetic language may beautify, promote or redefine desire, in the process of so doing it, too, becomes infected.

Sonnet structure, Sonnets structure

The building blocks of Shakespeare's Sonnets are units of fourteen pentameter lines rhyming according to the 'English', or 'Surreyan', form of the sonnet, as defined by Gascoigne in 1575:

some thinke that all Poemes (being short) may be called Sonets, as indeede it is a diminutive worde derived of

Sonare, but yet I can best allowe to call those Sonets which are of fourtene lynes, every line conteyning tenne syllables. The first twelve do ryme in staves of foure lines by crosse metre, and the last twoo ryming together do conclude the whole.¹

This correctly describes the rhyme-scheme Shakespeare uses: abab, cdcd, efef, gg. Despite deploying the ‘English’ form of sonnet, however, Shakespeare shows himself fully aware of the Italian form, with its pause, or volta, between the first eight lines (the octave) and the last six (the sestet). Much more often than not, some ‘turn’, fresh field of imagery or fresh direction is adopted in line 9, and line 8 is only rarely run on into line 9. Of the first eighteen sonnets in Q, for instance, five have a full stop at the end of line 8, nine have a colon, two end with a question mark and only two (5 and 6) end with a comma. There are three substantial deviations from the basic sonnet form, perhaps significantly located. Sonnet 99 has fifteen lines, and is followed by a poem in which the speaker rebukes his Muse for time-wasting and triviality. Sonnet 126, which marks off the end of the ‘fair youth’ sequence, is composed of six couplets, followed by two pairs of empty parentheses; and 145, slight and quibbling in subject-matter, but perhaps punning on the name ‘Hathaway’, is written in four-foot lines. For detailed discussion of all these, see the notes.

Though formally conventional, the sonnets are of course in most other ways unusual. Stylistically and semantically they are exceptionally complex, as Stephen Booth has shown: ‘words, lines, and clauses often give a multitude of meanings – of which none fits a single “basic” statement to which the others can be called auxiliary’.² Though Booth explores an unprecedentedly wide range of coexistent semantic readings in his 'analytic commentary', he does not by any means exhaust these possibilities, which are, in truth, inexhaustible. Indeed, this is one of the joys of Sonnets for modern readers. Here, even more than in the rest of Shakespeare's work, it is open to each and every reader to arrive at an individual and original response. The notorious truism that no two people ever concur in interpreting Sonnets is not cause for despair, but for rejoicing. In addition to the slippery syntax which Booth opens up so revealingly, there are many individual words, often simple in themselves, with multiple and contradictory connotations, such as 'lines' in 18.12. This can be construed as referring to 'lines of verse', 'lines of descent' or 'lines (wrinkles) on a face'. Inevitably, many further layers of suggestion are lost through modernization. The word appearing in Q as 'fild', for instance, could in at least two of its four occurrences be modernized either as 'filed' (= polished, rhetorically smooth) or as 'filled'.¹ In other cases 'inclusive' spelling forms have to be narrowed down, such as 'trauaile', which in Q's spelling in 27.2 ('trauail tired') and 34.2 ('make me trauaile forth') encompasses both 'travel' and 'travail': if the word is modernized to 'travel', the second sense will disappear from view. It is partly for this reason that many of Q's spelling forms are recorded in the textual apparatus. But the explanatory notes are deliberately kept brief, so that readers can explore further for themselves.

1 George Gascoigne, Certayne Notes of Instruction (1573) (Gascoigne, 1.471–2). Shakespeare may have been influenced also by a passage earlier in Gascoigne’s ‘Notes’: ‘If I should undertake to wryte in praise of a gentlewoman, I would neither praise her christal eye, nor her cherrie lippe, &c. For these things are trita & obvia . . . I would undertake to aunswere for any imperfection that shee hath, and thereupon to raiyse the prayse of hir commendacion’ (ibid., 1.425–6).

2 Booth, xii.

As for the structure of the sequence as a whole, T.P. Roche has observed very wisely that 'Our main difficulty as readers of sonnet-sequences is that we have not yet learned the rules of the game, have not learned to read beyond the plangent voices of the poet-lovers.'² This caveat applies most of all, perhaps, to the kind of structural and numerological analysis that Roche himself, among others, has developed. Yet since the pioneering analysis of

1 Cf. Duncan-Jones, 'Modernizing'.

2 Roche, 461.

Sonnets's pyramidal structure by Alastair Fowler, which has the unusual merit of incorporating A Lover's Complaint, it has been widely agreed that there is indeed some principle of overall arrangement at work, though scholars are divided on its nature and significance. Both Fowler and Roche, for instance, discover 'Trinitarian' imagery in the structure, but Roche makes far stronger claims than Fowler does for an explicit and un-parodic Christian reference. Also, by counting 153 and 154 as a single sonnet, Roche discovers that the total number of sonnets tallies with the 'miraculous draught of fishes' in St John's Gospel: 'Simon Peter went up, & drewe the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fiftie and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken' (John, 21.11). This is indeed a remarkable correspondence, though a more convincing way of arriving at 153, rather than 154, as the total number of sonnets, would be to omit from count the non-sonnet 126. Analogously, Barnabe Barnes's Parthenophil and Parthenope (1593) reaches a total of 154 poems and sonnets in its first two sections, and John Davies's Wittes Pilgrimage (?1605) totals 152.¹ But the allusion to the 'draught of fishes' need not necessarily point – as Roche claims – to a religious or spiritual frame of reference underpinning these sequences, all three of which are explicitly and insistently secular. The symbolic suggestion may be, rather, of containment within a measured structure. The sequences are composed of many and various units, yet a 'net' of ordered structure encloses them securely within the same space. The biblical analogy may point to 153 as defining the largest number of separate units that can be held together without disintegration, rather as the biblical 'threescore and ten' is taken as a figure defining the normal limit of the human life-span. In neither case need a poet's deployment of a biblically-derived number identify the work in which it occurs as specifically religious.

The arrangement of Shakespeare's Sonnets appears to allude

1 The Davies example is missed by Roche.

to many other number systems in addition to those based on biblical allusion. For instance, Sidney's Astrophil and Stella consists of 108 sonnets. The exact significance of this figure has been much discussed, and never satisfactorily explained. Yet it cannot be doubted that Sidney's closest friends and admirers believed it to be significant, since Sidney's friend Greville imitated it, as did several other poets in the Sidney circle.¹ If, once more, the non-sonnet 126 is left out of count, we can discover the figure of 108 sonnets contained also in Sonnets. Sonnets 1–17 all take the form of persuasions to marriage and procreation; a new and wider perspective is opened up in 18, in which the speaker for the first time expresses his own devotion to the youth, and determination to immortalize his beauty in 'eternal lines'. Sonnets 18–125 may then be seen to constitute, on the Sidneian model, a great central sequence of 108 sonnets. The reason why the persuasions to marriage add up to seventeen is open to conjecture, but it may possibly relate to the fact that eighteen was the age at which young men were believed to be ready for consummated marriage. Human physiology may also account for the length of the 'dark lady' sequence, 127–54. Though no one has pointed this out before, the figure 28 most probably alludes to the length of the lunar month, which is also that of the female menstrual cycle. In enclosing the great central, Sidneian, sequence of 108 sonnets, between the two shorter units of 17 and 28 sonnets, Shakespeare may have designed a contrast between the steadfast growth to physical perfection of the young man and the emotional and moral turbulence of the 'dark lady' cycle, with its images of sex-crazed lunacy:

Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
 And frantic mad with ever more unrest;
 My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
 At random from the truth vainly expressed . . .
(147.9–12)

1 Fowler, 175–6.

The 'temperate' beauty of the 'fair youth', which transcends seasonal and cyclical change, is contrasted with the unstable and corrupting power of the 'dark lady'. Her association with devilish temptation and venereal infection, in contrast to the beauty and loveableness of the youth, is nastily spelled out in 144, 'Two loves I have, of comfort and despair'.

It is probably not by chance that this unpleasant dichotomization of the angelic 'man right fair' and the grossly carnal 'woman coloured ill' occurs under the figure 144 (12×12), this number being popularly known as a 'gross'. It is one of many placings of individual sonnets which appear to be numerologically significant. Some of these have temporal references, such as 12, 'When I do count the clock that tells the time', alluding to the number of hours in a day, as in John, 11.9, 'Jesus answered, Are there not twelve houres in the day?' Sonnet 60, opening

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end

puns on 'hour minutes', the sixty minutes which compose each of 'our' hours. Sonnet 52, with its allusion to annual 'feasts', and their 'seldom coming, in the long year set', alludes to the fifty-two weeks of a calendar year. Other numbers relate to the human life-span. For instance, the figure 70, or 'threescore and ten', is strongly associated with the limit of a human life: it is noticeable that in 71, 'No longer mourn for me when I am dead', the speaker anticipates the aftermath of his own death. The number 63, the 'grand climacteric' 7×9 , is traditionally associated with change and mortality. In sonnet 63 the speaker stresses his own senility and anticipates that of the youth; and in the envoi 126 (63×2), marking the completion of two grand climacterics, the death of the young man, also, is seen as imminent. The two pairs of empty parentheses can be viewed as graves gaping open in readiness for the two corpses of poet and beloved.

Many more numerological finesses may be discerned. For instance, the embarrassingly anatomical sonnet 20, 'A woman's face with nature's own hand painted', probably draws on primitive associations of the figure with the human body, whose digits, fingers and toes, add up to twenty.¹ More specifically literary allusions and responses may be present in sonnets whose location corresponds with comparable positions in Sidney's Astrophil and Stella. For these, and for more detailed discussion of all these examples, see the commentary. As Roche suggests, much remains to be discovered about the principles, or 'rules of the game', according to which sonnet sequences are organized. But that there are sophisticated principles of organization at work cannot be seriously doubted. Indeed, it seems that Shakespeare was unusually inventive and ingenious both in his deployment of numerological structure and in his symbolic use of numerical allusion. The popular practice of rearranging the sonnets as set out in Q to produce a different overall meaning or drift is wholly unwarranted.

Put into its final shape early in the Jacobean period, Shakespeare's Sonnets takes its place alongside the many collections of satires, epigrams and playfully self-contradictory poems of the first decade of the seventeenth century. Explosively witty, emotionally complex, and sometimes breath-takingly cynical, the 1609 Sonnets does not, viewed as a whole, seem to constitute the 'sugred' collection that Meres's 1598 allusion might have led readers to expect. Indeed, it is in the company of satirical epigrams that the single sonnet 2 is often found in seventeenth-century miscellanies.² Charles Gildon in 1710 labelled Shakespeare's sonnets 'epigrams'.³ Though this classification may have been partly defensive, since love sonnets were deeply unfashionable in the Augustan period, it was not altogether inappropriate. Rosalie Colie has written brilliantly on the convergence, in Shakespeare's Sonnets, of salty epigram with sugary sonnet, which achieves a unique blend of styles and genres:

1 Cf. Hopper, ix, 9.

2 See, for instance, MS Folger V.a.345, which includes many of the epigrams of Harington and Bastard.

3 Rollins, 2.332-3.

I would suggest that, although Shakespeare trusted the sonnet-distillations to preserve his passion, for him both the banquet of agape and the sensual feast were heightened and refined by a pinch of salt. Or, to alter the metaphor slightly, with honey and salt, the styles and attitudes of sonneteer and epigrammatist, he could preserve the mixed bitter and sweet experience of loving, in a solution entirely his own.¹

Colie's metaphors are apt, for there is a sense throughout Sonnets that the process of metamorphosing the raw materiality of human experience into the verbal constructs of poetry is analogous to domestic methods of preservation and distillation. Even as roses, or 'beauty's rose' (1.2), are boiled with sugar to produce a distilled essence of rose-water, so beautiful human bodies, and the love they provoke, are 'sugred' with rhetoric to produce such lucid affirmations of human and poetic perfection as sonnets 18 and 55. But as the sequence proceeds, both the raw human material and its rhetorical adjuncts seem to deteriorate, or fester, leading to poetic effects whose complexity is deeply disturbing. From the sweet fragrance of the 'rose distilled' of 1-17 we come to taste 'Potions of eisell' (111.10), 'siren tears' (119.1) and 'infected moisture' (LC 323). Some of Shakespeare's Elizabethan sonnets may indeed have been, as Meres called them, 'sugred'. But his Jacobean sequence, consumed in its totality, is salt, satiric and bitter, taking its place thematically, as well as chronologically, alongside such painfully adult, sexually cynical, works as All's Well, Lear, Antony and Cleopatra, Troilus and Timon.

1 Colie, Resources, 75.

THIS EDITION

In wording, format and punctuation, Q has been followed more closely than in any previous modernized edition. This may be illustrated with reference to the poems whose Q versions are shown in Fig. 9. In 123, for instance, the exclamation mark after the opening word 'No' has been retained, as has the colon at the end of line 4, the comma after 'brief' in line 5, and the colon at the end of line 8. In 124, the colon at the end of line 8 has been retained – many recent editors, such as Booth and Kerrigan, substitute a full stop; and in 125 the comma after 'all' in line 6 has been retained. In the twelve-line envoi 126, Q's capitalization of 'Boy' has been retained; and even more notably, this is the first modernized text ever to reproduce the two pairs of empty italic parentheses at the end. For a detailed discussion of these, see the notes on this poem. Though Q's italicizations, such as Heriticke, Informer, Audite and Quietus, are not preserved, they are recorded in the textual notes.

In collating textual variants the chief object has been to note the present edition's few deviations from Q, and precedents for such deviance; and to record those accidentals of Q lost in modernization, such as the elision of unsounded 'e', the use of italics, parentheses and hyphens, and unusual and/or possibly significant spellings, which may reflect the character of the copy manuscript. Neither Q's punctuation, nor the present text's deviations from its punctuation, are recorded in the textual notes except in the few instances where it appears to have major consequences for sense. When modernization is universal, as in 3.2, 'another' for Q's 'an other', or 30.7, 'afresh' for Q's 'a fresh', no precedent is cited. In a divergence from normal Ard³ practice, of the early editions, only those of Malone and Capell have been collated, so the originator of an emendation or conjectural reading (e.g. Theobald, Steevens, Sewell) is not necessarily credited. Malone, for instance, denotes a reading adopted, but not in every

SHAKESPEARES

To trust those tables that receaue thee more,
To keepe an adiunct to remember thee,
Were to import forgetfulnesse in mee.

123

NO! Time, thou shalt not boast that I doe change, Thy pyramids buylt vp with newer might
To me are nothing nouell, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight
Our dates are breefe, and therefore we admire,
What thou dost foist vpon vs that isould,
And rather make them borne to our desire,
Then thinke that we before haue heard them tould:
Thy registers and thee I both desire,
Not wondering at the present, nor the past,
For thy records, and what we see doth lye,
Made more or les by thy continuall haist:
This I doe vow and this shall euer be,
I will be true dispiight thy syeth and thee.

124

YF my deare loue were but the childe of state,
It might for fortunes basterd be vnfathered,
As subiect to times loue, or to times hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gatherd,
No it was buylded far from accident,
It suffers not in smilinge pomp, nor falls
Vnder the blow of thralled discontent,
Whereto th' inuicing time our fashion calls:
It teares not policy that Heritick,
Which workes on leaues of short numbred howers,
But all alone stands hugely pollitick,
That it nor growes with heat, nor drownes with showres.
To this I witness call the soles of time,
Which die for goodnes, who haue liu'd for crime.

125

VEr't ought to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honoring,

Or

SONNETS.

Or layd great bases for eternity,
Which proues more short then wast or ruining?
Haue I not seene dwellers on forme and fauor
Lose all, and more by paying too much rent
For compound sweet; Forgoing simple fauor,
Pittifull thriours in their gazing spent.
Noe, let me be obsequious in thy heart,
And take thou my oblation, poore but free,
Which is not mixt with seconds, knows no art,
But mutuall render, onely me for thee.
Hence, thou subbornd I reformer, a trew soule
When most impeacht, stands least in thy controule.

126

O Thou my lovely Boy who in thy power,
Doe'st hold times fickle glasse, his sickle, howers
Who hast by wayning growne, and therein shou'st,
Thy louers withering, as thy sweet selfe grow'st.
If Nature (soueraine misteres ouer wrack)
As thou goest on wards still will plucke thee backe,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace, and wretched mynuit kill.
Yet feare her O thou minion of her pleasure,
She may detaine, but not still keepe her treasure!
Her Audits (though delayd) answer'd must be,
And her Quies me is to render thee.

127

IN theould age blacke was not counted faire,
Or if it were it bore not beauties name:
But now is blacke beauties successiue heire,
And Beautie slanderd with a bastard shame,
For since each hand hath put on Natures power,
Fairing the soule with Arts faulce borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name no holy boure,
But is prophan'd, if not liues in disgrace.

H 3

Therefore

case originated, by Edmond Malone. However, the most notorious cruxes, such as 12.4, 25.9-11, 34.12, 44.13, 46.9, 51.11, 69.14, 126.2, 146.2 and 152.13, are discussed in some detail in the notes. For LC, only Capell, Ard¹, Riv, Oxf and Kerrigan have been collated.

For a full historical collation of early editions, H.E. Rollins's variorum Sonnets should be consulted, or, for LC, Rollins's 1938 variorum Poems (Philadelphia and London, 1938).

SHAKE-SPEARES

SONNETS.

Neuer before Imprinted.

AT LONDON
By G. Eld for T. T. and are to be soldc by William Aspley.
1609. 24

TITLE-PAGE (Fig. 13) facsimile of the 1609 Quarto (Bodleian Malone 34) title-page. The double emphasis on Shakespeare's authorship of the sonnets (see Introduction, pp. 35-6) and on this as their first public appearance was no doubt a marketing strategy.

DEDICATION At its simplest, this much-discussed preliminary appears to indicate that T[homas]. T[horpe]., the publisher of Shakespeare's Sonnets, endorses the poet's desire to praise and immortalize his friend, Mr. W.H., who is the begetter, or inspirer, of the poems which follow. The durability (eternity) of the wishes, and, it is implied, of what is wished for, is emphasized by the capitalization of each word and division by points, suggesting that this is a quasi-Roman inscription, written as if on stone. T.T. shows that he has read the sonnets he is publishing, or at least the first seventeen, and understands that the poet's young friend is dilatory in begetting children; he has, however, 'fathered' this volume of poems, which offers him a different kind of immortality.

- 1 ONLY. like so many words in the sonnets themselves, double-edged: primarily it suggests that Mr. W.H. is supreme or paramount (cf. 1.10 and n.) but there may be a secondary suggestion that he has only begotten sonnets, not children.
- 10 ADVENTURER. OED (sense 4) cites this example, with the definition 'One who undertakes or shares in commercial adventures or enterprises'.
- 11-12 SETTING. FORTH. synonymous with 'publishing', and a phrase commonly used in this sense; cf. OED set 144e, with an example from Robert Greene: 'I have . . . set forth many pamphlets, full of much love and little scholarship' (Greene's Mourning Garment [1590]).

TO. THE. ONLY. BEGETTER. OF.
THESE. ENSUING. SONNETS.
Mr. W.H. ALL. HAPPINESS.
AND. THAT. ETERNITY.
PROMISED. 5
BY.
OUR. EVER-LIVING. POET.
WISHETH.
THE. WELL-WISHING.
ADVENTURER. IN. 10
SETTING.
FORTH.

T.T.

SHAKESPEARE'S
SONNETS

- 1 The sonnet sets out a eugenic proposition: the most excellent examples of natural beings are under an obligation to reproduce themselves. But the addressee, to whom this rule applies, is narcissistically dedicated to self-love, allowing his beauty to go to waste by hoarding it up.
- 1 creatures created things, whether animal or vegetable
- 2 beauty's rose The rose was often associated with female beauty and, more specifically, female genitalia; cf. The Romance of the Rose, or Chaucer's Wife of Bath's Prologue, 447–8. But the capitalization and italicization of the word in Q may signal a wider field of reference, encompassing both genders and, possibly, a metaphysical ideal of beauty. Since the Tudor emblem was a rose, there may also be a reminiscence of the widespread desire, in the first half of her reign, that Elizabeth I should marry and reproduce. The memory of the dead queen and dead dynasty was fresh at the time of Q's publication.
- 3 riper suggests fruit rather than flowers, indicating the speedy process of growth. Cf. also the proverb 'Soon riper, soon rotten' (Tilley, R133), echoed in R2 2.1.153.
- 4 His tender heir The possessive pronoun is the first indication that the addressee is male. A tender heir is, primarily, a young heir (cf. Lat. tener); but there is probably also an allusion to a false etymology of mulier (Lat. woman, wife) from mollis aer (Lat. soft air), which was attributed to Cicero, and occurs in one of the earliest English printed books, William Caxton, trans., Jacobus de Cessolis: The Game of Chess (c. 1483) Scolar Press, 1976, sig. G8: 'the women ben lykened unto softe waxe or softe ayer, and therefore she is callyd Mulier whiche is as moche to saye in latyn as mollis aer'. Shakespeare used this pun as a crucial narrative element in Cym 5.5.448–9. For those who pick up this allusion, l. 4 suggests both (i) his memory may be sustained by his child; and (ii) his wife (mulier) may give birth to (bear) the child which replicates him. The internal rhyme heir . . . bear reinforces the notion of replication.
- 5 contracted He is pledged to himself, as in a contract of marriage; but he is also diminished (contracted) to the self-reflexive scope of his own bright eyes.
- 6 Like a candle, the young man sustains his beauty (flame) with fuel made from his own body (substance): cf. 3H6 2.6.1, where Clifford, mortally wounded, says 'Here burns my candle out'.
- 8 suggests the polarization of the young man's being, one half a cruel foe to the other, which is sweet: the insertion of sweet before the second self hints at the speaker's affection.
- 10 only . . . spring There may be a suggestion that the young man shows great promise as a courtier: cf. R2 5.2.46–7, in which the Duchess of York asks her son Aumerle 'who are the violets now / That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?' – that is, who promise to be favourites with the new King? The word only carries a positive sense of 'supreme', 'outstanding', as in Robert Greene's description of Shakespeare as 'the onely Shake-scene in a country' (Groat's-worth of wit [1592], printed in Schoenbaum, Life, 115–16); or, on the previous leaf of Q (Dedication, ll. 1–3), Thomas Thorpe's description of 'Mr. W.H.' as 'only better' of Son. In his beauty, the young man is a herald, or precursor, to a spring full of 'gauds', or rich ornaments: gaudy does not necessarily carry connotations of vulgarity or excess; cf. LLL 5.2.812.
- 11 bud a common image for a promising young man: cf. Henry Gifford's poem For Soldiers (c. 1580), 1, 'Ye buds of Brutus' land' (Jones, 324). content happiness, but also 'contents', that which is contained: the innermost wealth of his beauty and manhood is 'buried', instead of being unfolded, as the bud image suggests it should.

1

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
 That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
 But as the ripper should by time decease
 His tender heir might bear his memory:
 But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes, 5
 Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,
 Making a famine where abundance lies,
 Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
 Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament,
 And only herald to the gaudy spring, 10
 Within thine own bud buriest thy content,
 And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
 Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
 To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

12 tender churl Tender is repeated, in the same position, from l. 4; but whereas a tender heir would replicate the young man's beauty, the young man himself, 'youthful but inept or clumsy, squanders his beauty even as he tries to preserve it. That the word churl, with normal connotations of miserliness and lack of breeding, could occasionally be used with affection, is suggested by Juliet's reproach to the dead Romeo, 'O churl! Drunk all, and left no friendly drop' (RJ 5.3.163). mak'st waste suggests both 'wastes' = throws away, and 'lays waste': the potentially fruitful world will be left desolate by the youth's failure to procreate.

niggarding acting in a mean, stingy fashion

13 this glutton demonstrative: the following line defines the kind of glutton he will be.

14 awkwardly expressed: what is owed to the world, the young man's wealth of beauty, is instead consumed by himself, first, and will be finally devoured by the grave. Dying is commonly referred to as 'paying one's debt to nature' (Tilley, D168). For the sterile body as itself a grave, cf. VA 757-60.

1] Malone; SHAKE-SPEARES, SONNETS. Q 2 rose] Rose 6 self-substantial] Malone; selfe substantial] Q

- 2 When the young man has lost his beauty, he can guard against reproach by pointing to offspring in whom it is renewed. This is a traditional argument for procreation, though one more commonly used in poems to seduce a female addressee. (Perhaps it was because of the ease with which it could be accommodated to the heterosexual convention that this poem acquired great popularity in the 1620s and 1630s, from when a dozen MS texts survive, eleven of which represent a different, probably inauthentic, version (see Appendix, p. 453).)
- 1 forty winters The number is formulaic for 'many', as in the 'forty years' during which the Israelites fed on manna in the wilderness (Exodus, 16.35). The citation of winters, rather than summers, stresses the withering, blighting aspect of time.
- 2-3 thy . . . Thy If stress is placed on thy, it is implied that the speaker's brow is already wrinkled.
- 3 proud livery splendid clothes, imagining the young man's physical attractions, but also suggesting that they are impermanent
- 4 tattered weed torn garment
- 6 treasure continues the image in l.11-12, in which the youth is miserly in hoarding up his beauty, adding to it an allusion to the parable of the talents (Matthew, 25.14-30), in which a lord, figuring God, after some years' absence asks his servants to account for the talents (coins) he had left in their keeping
- 7 deep-sunken eyes contrasted with bright eyes in l.5
- 8 all-eating shame recalls the image of gluttony at the end of the previous sonnet. Traditionally, it is time that devours all (tempus edax rerum: cf. 19.1 and n.); the attribution of this process to shame makes ageing seem disgraceful.
- thrifless unprofitable; praise that is no praise
- 9 deserved would merit
- 11 sum . . . excuse enumerate my assets, and make reparation (excuse) for my own (old) age. Alternatively, my old excuse could refer to the arguments used previously, in sonnet 1, by the poet: i.e. 'justify yourself on the basis established earlier by me'.
- 12 Proving demonstrating, or discovering, or both by succession beauty inherited legally, by inherited right (OED succession 4b)
- 14 And . . . cold The (no longer) young man will perceive the renewal of his blood-line and beauty when his own body has undergone the wintry process of ageing.

2

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
Will be a tattered weed of small worth held:
Then being asked, where all thy beauty lies, 5
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserved thy beauty's use
If thou couldst answer, 'This fair child of mine 10
Shall sum my count, and make my old excuse',
Proving his beauty by succession thine:
 This were to be new made when thou art old,
 And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

4 tattered] totter'd Q, IR For a MS version see Appendix, p. 463.

- 3 The sight of his own face reflected in a mirror should warn the youth of the need to father children, so that his beauty may be renewed in offspring, even as his mother's has been renewed in himself. More explicitly than the two preceding sonnets, this one indicates that the addressee is male. The poet begins by reinforcing the young man's narcissism, but finds within it an argument for procreation.
- 1-2 Look . . . Now The stress on these opening words lends emphasis to the command.
- 3 fresh repair the youthful condition of your face, which is currently in 'good repair'
- 4 beguile the world trick, betray the world; the stress on the youth's obligation to the world recalls 1.14. unless some mother deny some (potential) mother her happiness (bliss, or blessing); the verb is apparently Shakespeare's coinage.
- 5 unearned unshown, as with ears of corn; i.e. a virgin womb
- 6 Human procreation was often described in terms of agriculture; cf. Agrippa's account of Julius Caesar's affair with Cleopatra: 'He plough'd her, and she cropped' (AC 2.2.228; cf. also MM 1.4.44). There is a further play on the association of husbandry with marriage – being a husband – as well as practising husbandry, i.e. farming, with additional connotations of 'husbanding' precious resources .
- 7 fond foolish, silly; but also fond = loving
- 7-8 the . . . self-love a stronger reminiscence than in 1.14 of VA 757-60
- 9 Thou . . . glass The literal glass of 1.1 here becomes metaphorical. A 'glass' or 'mirror' often stood for an exemplary image, rather than an exact simulacrum; cf. George Gascoigne, The Steele Glas (1576); and The Mirrour for Magistrates (1559 onwards). Suggests 'you see your mother's youth imaged in you', and 'your mother sees herself imaged in you', and 'others, seeing you, receive an image of your mother when she was young'. The selection of mother, rather than father, to exemplify the continuation of family traits may suggest a reference to a well-known mother; for instance, for those who identify the youth with William Herbert, the 'subject of all verse', Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke. It is consistent with this sonnet's preoccupation with engaging the youth's interest in the feminine; it hints also that the youth is still so young as to have a freshness of complexion which is as much feminine as masculine, as in 20.1.
- 10 lovely April her bloom of youth; cf. AYL 4.1.147.
- 11 windows of thine age The implicit suggestion is that the glass gazed on in youth will become a translucent 'window' in maturity, recalling St Paul's famous account of the prospect of spiritual vision in maturity: 'For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face' (1 Corinthians, 13.12).
- 12 In spite of his own wrinkles, he will, in his child, view his own earliest youth. Within the cycle of man's life, youth is the Golden Age; cf. 'the golden prime of this sweet prince', R3 1.2.252; or Andrew Marvell's 'The Picture of little T.C. in a Prospect of Flowers', 1-2: 'See with what simplicity / This Nimph begins her golden daies!' (Marvell, 1.40-1).
- 13 remembered not to be without a desire to be remembered; or with a desire not to be remembered

3

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
 Now is the time that face should form another,
 Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest
 Thou dost beguile the world, unbless some mother.
 For where is she so fair whose unneared womb 5
 Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
 Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
 Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
 Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
 Calls back the lovely April of her prime: 10
 So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
 Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
 But if thou live remembered not to be,
 Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

5 unneared] vn-neard 8 self-love] selfe loue 13 live] love Capell 14 image] Image

- 4 This sonnet extends the metaphor of beauty and sexuality as money initiated in 1 and 2, adding to it the idea of wills and inheritance. The young man is wasting this legacy on himself, and as a result has nothing to leave to the next generation; nor will there be a next generation.
- 1–2 spend / Upon thyself The primary image is of self-contemplation and a failure to turn to women as the 'other', as in 3.1–6; but there is subsidiary allusion to masturbation. That Shakespeare, like Pepys, used 'spend' for 'discharge semen' is shown in AW 2.3.284.
- 2 beauty's legacy both the beauty that has been bequeathed to him by nature, and the beauty that he should bequeath to his children
- 3 but doth lend perhaps an echo of ll. 31–5 of Wyatt's famous lyric beginning 'My lute awake': 'And then may chance thee to repent / The time that thou hast lost and spent / To cause thy lovers sigh and swoon, / Then shalt thou know beauty but lent / And wish and want as I have done' (Wyatt, 145).
- 4 frank generous free generous, open-handed, with some connotations of nobility; cf. Oth 1.3.405, 3.3.199.
- 5 niggard miser abuse misuse; with a possible sexual innuendo (cf. OED abuse 6, 'To violate, ravish, defile')
- 6 The abundant beauty which was given you so that you would give it to others.
- 7 usurer . . . use exploits two opposite senses of use (OED 8a, 'To employ or make use of for a profitable end'; and 12, 'To expend or consume')
- 8 sum of sums puns on 'some': many 'somes' make a huge sum; cf. MV 3.2.157–8.
live make a living; live in posterity
- 9 traffic trade, negotiation; sexual commerce; cf. Partridge, Bandy, 208.
- 10 If the emphasis is placed on of, this means 'you trick yourself out of possession of the sweetest, most intimate, part of yourself'.
- 11 how The word seems redundant, but underlines the searching nature of the question.
- 12 An audit, or examination of (financial) accounts, would normally be something to 'give' rather than to leave. The suggestion here is that the young man will both leave (depart from) the mortal world, and leave (as in legacy, l. 2) an empty balance sheet to posterity. Audit, capitalized and italicized in Q, is repeated in this form at the very end of the 'fair youth' sequence, sonnet 126, in which 'Nature' threatens imminently to summon him to her 'Audite (though delayd)'. 'Acceptable' must be stressed thus.
- 13 unused beauty not used in renewing itself through procreation; with a secondary sense of 'unprecedented, exceptional' beauty. His beauty is unique and, if not reproduced, will die with him.
- 14 used used
th'executor In a literal sense, if the young man has a child, that child can act as his executor; figuratively, a child can 'execute', or manifest, the father's beauty to a future age.

4

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
 Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
 Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
 And being frank, she lends to those are free:
 Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse 5
 The bounteous largesse given thee to give?
 Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
 So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
 For having traffic with thyself alone,
 Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive; 10
 Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
 What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
 Thy unused beauty must be tombed with thee,
 Which used, lives th'executor to be.

12 audit] Audit 13 unused] vnus'd 14 used] vsed

- 5 The process which has brought the young man to his present physical perfection will in the same manner bring him to decay. However, deploying a metaphor which readers of Sidney's New Arcadia will recognize as symbolizing marriage, the speaker tells him that he can preserve the essence of his beauty, even as Elizabethan housewives preserve roses by distilling rose-water.
- 1 hours pronounced as two syllables, and spelt 'howers' in Q frame create
- 4 unfair 'to deprive of fairness or beauty' (OED, with this example); suggests also 'treat unfairly', the second sense being appropriate to the activity of tyrants
- 6 hideous in its original sense, 'causing dread or horror' (OED 1)
- 7 Vital 'humours' in the human body were seen as equivalent to sap in nature, maturity producing a chilling and drying comparable with the effect of autumn on vegetation; cf. Burrow, 12. Checked is used in OED's sense
- II. 3, 'to arrest, stop or retard'.
- 8 Beauty o'er-snowed suggests both a once verdant landscape now covered with snow, and white hair on a human head
- 9 summer's distillation rose-water, much used in Elizabethan cookery and medicine; cf. Fettiplace, 147-8. The central issue is still the preservation of beauty's rose (1.2). The source of the image is a passage in Sidney's Arcadia in which 'crystalline marriage' is compared to 'a pure rose-water kept in a crystal glass' (NA, 333).
- left in retrospect, gives leaves in l. 7 some of the character of a verb
- 12 Some such word as 'survive' is implied: the omission of a main verb enacts the incompleteness that is evoked.
- 14 Leese archaic form of 'lose', perhaps adopted here to assonate with meet and sweet.
still always, for ever; perhaps with a pun on the still in which flowers are transmuted into a liquid essence

5

Those hours that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair which fairly doth excel.
For never-resting time leads summer on 5
To hideous winter, and confounds him there,
Sap checked with frost and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'er-snowed and bareness everywhere;
Then were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass, 10
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was.
But flowers distilled, though they with winter meet, Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

- 6 This follows on immediately from the preceding sonnet: the youth must distil his beauty's rose – that is, marry. In so doing he will make some woman happy and will multiply images of himself, thus defying death.
- 1 ragged a transferred epithet: winter's hand tears nature's beauty, causing it to be ragged; and an allegorical figure of winter might wear a ragged costume.
- deface despoil; and, more specifically, obliterate the young man's facial features
- 3 vial a flask or container, symbolizing a womb
- 3–4 treasure . . . treasure The young man is to enrich a woman by bestowing his beauty on her; his treasure is also the due of a female 'beauty'. That treasure could refer to semen is indicated by Oth 4.3.89; place could also have sexual undertones (Oth 4.1.261 and passim).
- 5 That way of causing treasures to increase is not the kind of usury (Q's spelling suggests also 'usage') which is forbidden. To 'use' could denote sexual fruition; cf. Oth 5.2.70. Usury, i.e. lending out money or goods on interest, was officially regarded as sinful and contrary to Scripture, though in practice widespread.
- 6 happies makes happy those . . . loan those who, by having children, lend their wealth freely to the world
- 8 ten for one i.e. if he increases himself tenfold by begetting ten children
- 10 refigured replicated your 'figure', or face or appearance; but also added numbers to the figure one by producing a hundred grandchildren, each of ten children generating ten more
- 13 self-willed echoes self-killed in l. 4; suggests, as well as 'wilful, selfish', 'making a will of his possessions only to himself'; and directing his sexual desire ('will') only towards himself fair beautiful; but also well-judging

6

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
 In thee thy summer, ere thou be distilled:
 Make sweet some vial, treasure thou some place
 With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-killed.
 That use is not forbidden usury 5
 Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
 That's for thyself to breed another thee,
 Or ten times happier, be it ten for one:
 Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
 If ten of thine ten times refigured thee; 10
 Then what could death do if thou shouldst depart,
 Leaving thee living in posterity?
 Be not self-willed, for thou art much too fair
 To be death's conquest and make worms thine heir.

1 ragged] wragged Q; rugged Capell 4 beauty's] Malone; beautits Q; beauties Benson 5 usury] usery

- 7 Even as the sun is gazed on and admired as it rises to its height, but neglected in its setting, so the young man will lose the admiration he now enjoys unless he begets a child. The point is clinched by the postponement of the word 'sun' until the end, when it converges with son.
- 1 gracious full of grace, like a monarch
- 2 under eye The sun is itself like an eye (cf. 18.5), which is in every sense 'above' human eyes.
- 4 Human beings gaze downwards to avoid being dazzled by the midday sun, just as subjects bow before a monarch. Lear swears 'by the sacred radiance of the sun' (KL 1.1.109).
- 5 And having The implied subject of the verb is still the gracious light, i.e. the sun.
steep-up precipitous; perpendicular; cf. LLL 4.1.2.
- 6 strong . . . age Aristotle in his Rhetoric (2.12–14) divided human life into three ages, giving supremacy to the middle one. That middle age for Shakespeare suggested flourishing prime, rather than being, as now, a euphemism for incipient decay, is suggested by WT 4.4.107–8. Cf. also Burrow, 8–11.
- 7 places a double emphasis on the durability of the sun's sway over humankind; however, the phrase beauty still, at the half-way point of the sonnet, also suggests 'motionless beauty', a delusive fixity.
adore conceals a play on 'ore', the source of gold
- 8 Attending on waiting on, as courtiers wait on a monarch; but also paying attention to
- 9 high-most pitch topmost point weary car The sun was viewed in classical mythology as a horse-drawn chariot.
- 10 reeleth staggers; a word often associated with drunkenness (cf. OED reel 7)
- 11 fore-duteous often presented in modern editions as 'fore duteous'; but 'fore' as a prefix suggests 'previous', and need not be short for 'before'. Either way, the meaning is clear: eyes pay tribute to the sun in the forenoon (morning), not later.
- 12 low tract low trajectory, path
look another way alludes to the proverb, 'The rising, not the setting, sun is worshipped by most men' (Tilley, S979). This was often given a political application, as in Sidney's citation of the Queen herself in his widely circulated 'Letter to Queen Elizabeth' (Prose, 54, 184). There is an implication not only that the young man will age, but that his current popularity will not last.
- 13 thysself . . . noon In his prime of life the young man is outlasting himself; he is as if on the point of death (cf. depart in 6.11); and he is expending his energy (semen) in fruitless masturbation: 'noon' was a recognized metaphor for male sexual excitement; cf. Sidney, AS, 76.9; RJ 2.4.119.
- 14 diest pronounced as one syllable. The young man will 'die' Unlooked on in the sense that his image will no longer be seen; and he will experience orgasm in private, instead of directing his sexuality to procreation with its public consequences.
get beget; acquire. In the second sense, he will recover the 'sun/son', thus counteracting the cycle of decline.

7

Lo, in the Orient when the gracious light
 Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
 Doth homage to his new appearing sight,
 Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
 And having climbed the steep-up heavenly hill, 5
 Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
 Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
 Attending on his golden pilgrimage:
 But when from high-most pitch with weary car
 Like feeble age he reeleth from the day, 10
 The eyes, fore-duteous, now converted are
 From his low tract, and look another way:
 So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
 Unlooked on diest, unless thou get a son.

3 new appearing] new-appearing Malone 5 steep-up] Malone; steepe vp Q 11 fore-duteous] (fore dutious) Q, Benson; ('fore duteous) IR, Booth, *Cam*³; 'fore duteous Malone, *Ard*¹, Oxf, Kerrigan

- 8 A new field of imagery is introduced, that of music. The young man is made melancholy by hearing music; this is because its harmony and concord prompts him to confront his obligation to marry.
- 1 Music to hear Probably a vocative address: 'you, the sound of whom is like music'. Shakespeare refers quite frequently to music as provoking pensiveness or melancholy; cf. Jessica's remark, 'I am never merry when I hear sweet music', MV 5.1.69; cf. also TN 1.1.
- 2 Sweets things which are sweet, or delightful
- 4 annoy pain, irksomeness
- 5 well-tuned well-tuned
- 6 unions chords, which unite notes in harmony. There is probably another echo of Cecropia's speech on marriage in Sidney's NA, 333, already alluded to in 5.9–12: 'And is a solitary life as good as this? Then can one string make as good music as a consort'.
- 7–8 confounds . . . bear Instead of distributing and multiplying his talents, the young man confines all his potential multiplicity within himself, so 'confounding', or destroying, it: parts suggests both the separate musical parts assigned to singers or instruments in a consort of music, and the parts, or excellent attributes, that he should transmit to others; cf. 17.4 and 69.1.
- 9 one string . . . another The idea of the 'male' string as the one essential to harmony is suggested also in Marlowe's Hero and Leander, 229–30: 'Like untun'd golden strings all women are, / Which long time lie untun'd, will harshly jar' (Marlowe, Poems, 16).
- 10 Strikes each in each suggests sexual union; cf. Tit 2.1.117–18.
- 13 speechless song The music is imagined as instrumental rather than vocal: its message to the youth is not conveyed by words, but by its innate harmony in blended notes.
- 14 'Thou . . . none' Without marriage, the young man, though greeted as Music in the opening line, will have no harmony; there is also an allusion to the ancient mathematical truism, derived from Aristotle's Metaphysics, 1080a, 'one is no number' (Tilley, O54); and perhaps specifically to its use as a wooing strategy in Marlowe's Hero and Leander, 255–6: 'One is no number; maids are nothing then, / Without the sweet society of men' (Marlowe, Poems, 17). He will also be none in the sense of 'a nonentity' if he fails to transmit his inherited aristocratic identity. The chiming of single with sing (12) and Sings (14) reinforces the effect of one pleasing note (12).

8

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy;
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly,
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds 5
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear:
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering, 10
Resembling sire, and child, and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee: 'Thou single wilt prove none.'

5 well-tuned] Malone; well tuned Q For a MS version see Appendix, p.464

- 9 This sonnet redeploys the 'public good' argument invoked in 1 and 4. If the youth remains unmarried for fear of dying suddenly and leaving a desolate widow, he should remember that the whole world will be his widow if he dies without issue, and he will have allowed his own beauty to be destroyed. The weakness of the sonnet lies in its opening proposition: if fear of leaving a widow is not the motive for not marrying, none of what follows applies.
- 2 consum'st suggests eating (auto-cannibalism); burning (as in a self-consuming candle); and economic consumption
- 3 hap chance, happen
- 4 makeless mateless ('make' = mate, peer); but with a secondary layer of OED's sense 1, 'Without an equal; matchless; peerless', implying that only the youth would be an adequate match for The world
- 5 world . . . widow . . . weep The alliteration has a somewhat theatrical effect of emphasis.
- 7 private widow widow in the normal, human sense – individual whose husband has died
- 8 By children's eyes by looking at the beauty of her children's eyes, recalling those of their dead father; but also through the vision of the children themselves, who remember their father and look forward to renewing him in their own progeny
- 9 Look what whatever, that which (cf. OED look 4b). However, there is also a continuation of the image of 'looking' from the previous line – 'Look out for what a prodigal spends'.
- 10 Though the prodigal (unthrift) has parted with his treasure, it is still around somewhere in the world.
- 11 beauty's waste the waste, or consumption, of physical beauty; with some suggestion also of its 'wasting', or natural decay through ageing
- 12 Beauty which is so preserved (kept unused) is destroyed in the process; cf. consum'st in l. 2. There may be another subsidiary reference to masturbation (cf. Son 4, 7.13), in which the youth 'uses', or sexually enjoys, his own beauty, and in the process erodes it, especially since each sexual emission was believed to shorten life.
- 14 himself The subject is either bosom, as a metonym for the young man; or the young man himself.
- murd'rous shame shameful act which is murderous in its effect

9

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah, if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wail thee like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow, and still weep 5
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind:
Look what an unthrift in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it; 10
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unused the user so destroys it:
 No love toward others in that bosom sits
 That on himself such murd'rous shame commits.

- 10 This is the earliest sonnet in the sequence in which the poet indicates his own devotion to the young man, and uses it as a bargaining counter. The youth's self-hatred is indicated by his refusal to sustain his own family line; if the other, more public, arguments fail, he should at least procreate for the sake of his friend the poet.
- 1 shame picks up the penultimate word of the preceding sonnet: its use here is both exclamatory – 'For shame!' – and argumentative: 'Your sense of shame should impel you . . .'.
bear'st Shakespeare often associates the 'bearing' of love with shame or sin; cf. Oth 5.2.240, 'Think on thy sins. – They are loves I bear to you'.
- 3 beloved of many Cf. 31.1.
- 5 murd'rous hate develops the murd'rous shame of 9.14
- 6 stick'st not do not hesitate to (OED stick 15)
- 7 that beauteous roof the house, or aristocratic family, to which the youth belongs. It may be for the sake of assonance with ruinate and repair that roof is used as a synecdoche for the whole house.
- 8 A contemporary application of the image of continuing the family line as house-building is offered by Charles Blount (1563–1606); he 'chose to be drawne with a Trowell in his hand, and this Mot: Ad reaedificandam antiquam domum, to rebuild the ancient House: For this noble and ancient Barrony was decaied' (Fynes Moryson, An Itinerary (1617; Glasgow, 1907), 2.260–1).
- 9 thought intention, outlook
my mind my opinion of you
- 10 fairer lodged contained in a more beautiful exterior
- 11 presence visible demeanour, appearance; what is perceived when one is in your presence, a word with royal and aristocratic connotations (OED 2b) gracious full of grace, or bounty; another word suggesting the aristocratic status of the addressee
- 12 kind-hearted amiable in intention; but also with some suggestion of kind = natural, according to 'kind', supporting the idea of the youth's present behaviour as unnaturally unfeeling
- 13 for . . . me a new and at this point unforeseen argument: it is not merely for the sake of the world that the youth should replicate himself, but as a gesture of affection to the speaker.
- 14 in . . . thee in your children or in yourself. We might expect the final emphasis to fall on thine, rather than on the youth's own continuance, and it would have been easy for Shakespeare to have written 'love of mine . . . thee or thine'. That he did not do so may prepare for a movement away from the theme of procreation towards that of loving friendship.

10

For shame deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident;
Grant, if thou wilt, thou art beloved of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident:
For thou art so possessed with murd'rous hate 5
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate
Which to repair should be thy chief desire:
O change thy thought, that I may change my mind;
Shall hate be fairer lodged than gentle love? 10
Be as thy presence is, gracious and kind;
Or to thyself at least kind-hearted prove,
 Make thee another self for love of me,
 That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

12 kind-hearted] Malone; kind harted Q

- 11 The young man's fast-fading youth will be compensated for in the rapid development of a child. 'The world must be peopled' (MA 2.3.251), and the addressee's excellence particularly obliges him to reproduce himself. A resumption of the argument of sonnet 1.
- 1 fast . . . fast speedily; steadfastly grow'st will grow
- 2 thine your offspring (picked up from 10.14); or 'a wife of thine', whose swelling womb compensates for her husband's loss of semen from . . . departest The child will grow out of, and will manifest, what the young man bestows or is separated from: he will 'part' or distribute himself in offspring.
- 3 fresh blood Inheritance was commonly seen as the transmission of blood.
youngly thou bestow'st You give your blood (semen) to a wife while you are young, and, perhaps, in a youthful manner.
- 4 convertest turn away; are transformed: Elizabethan pronunciation made this an acceptable rhyme with departest; cf. the rhyme of 'convert' with 'heart/art' in Luc 592.
- 5 Herein in marriage and procreation
- 7 mindèd so held the same opinion as you the times the human era
- 8 threescore . . . away The world would be depopulated within sixty years; make away = 'put an end to, destroy' (Glossary).
- 9 for store for increase, as well as for preservation
- 10 Harsh . . . rude rough in appearance, lacking beauty or 'feature', and unpolished or lower-class. The triple adjectives recall the complementary triads in ll. 5–6, but do not precisely match them.
- 11 Look whom whomsoever; cf. Look what in 9.9.
gave the more gave her gifts abundantly. Somewhere behind this is Christ's assertion 'For he that hath, to him shall be given' (Mark, 4.25).
- 13 seal the stamp or image which represents nature's authority, with a possible echo of the Song of Solomon 8.6, 'Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death'.
- 14 print more reproduce your image in children. For fathering a child as printing, cf. WT 2.3.98, 'Although the print be little, the whole matter / And copy of the father'. However, 'print' need not refer to the written word, and may here suggest rather a seal of authority marked in wax.
that copy that exemplar of nature's excellence, with a subsidiary play on 'copy' as Lat. copia = abundance, picking up the idea of store (l. 9)

- 12 Evidence of the passage of time throughout the natural world prompts the poet to consider that his friend is subject to the same process, against which there is no defence except pro-creation. However, the effect is almost self-cancelling, for the poetic evocation of time's all-inclusive operation is so persuasive as to leave the remedy in doubt. The sonnet's number alludes to the number of hours in a day; see Introduction, p. 100.
- 1 count the clock hear, and count, the chimes made by the clock
- 2 brave splendid, brilliant, showy hideous two syllables; cf. 5.6 and n. There may also be an association with 'hidden'.
- 3 the . . . prime the violet after its peak of perfection: prime was originally associated with the first hour of the day (OED 1, 2), and then, by extension, with youth or early spring. Shakespeare often linked violets (which symbolized faithfulness) with the vulnerability of early youth; cf. especially Ham 1.3.7–8, 4.5.181–3, 5.1.233–4.
- 4 sable . . . white black hair turned white. Q's 'or siluer'd ore' has occasioned much editorial debate, with a preference among eighteenth-century editors for Charles Gildon's emendation to 'are silvered o'er', and some late nineteenth-century supporters of Brinsley Nicholson's suggestion 'o'er silvered all' (Rollins, 1.32–3), which is tightened up by Ingram and Redpath as 'o'er-silver'd all'. The association of both 'or' (in heraldry) and 'ore' (in mining) with gold has also generated some unhelpful speculation: it is unlikely that Shakespeare meant to imply that with the passage of time human hair turned gold as well as silver, like that of the widow in Oscar Wilde 'whose hair has gone quite gold with grief'. Booth, adopting Malone's emendation of 'or' to 'all', points out sensibly that 'Shakespeare's contemporaries probably emended the line as they read'. Sisson's objection to 'all silvered o'er' as too similar to 'all girded up' in l. 7 is in fact a point in its favour, since the repetition of similar words and phrases within a sonnet is a habitual finesse (cf. Sisson, 2.209–10).
- 6 erst once, formerly
- canopy the herd give shade to sheep and cattle as if with a canopy
- 7–8 summer's . . . beard a richly inclusive image of crops which have been cut and harvested, with an implicit personification of the trussed-up and white-bearded corn (formerly green) as an old man being carried to his grave. Though a bier could be any kind of barrow or litter for carrying heavy goods, its strongest association was with the portage of dead bodies, as in Ophelia's 'They bare him barefaced on the bier' (Ham 4.5.164). In harvesting rituals, the cutting of the corn was often seen as the ritual slaughter of an old man, as in the folksong 'John Barleycorn'. Q's capitalization of 'Sommers' may point also to a recollection of Nashe's play Summers Last Will and Testament (written 1592/3, published 1600), in which Summer is represented as an old man on the point of death: 'Harvest and age have whit'ned my greene head' (Nashe, 3.237). The phrase girded up, or tied round with strings or straps, applies equally well either to sheaves of corn being carried into a barn or to dead bodies being carried into a church.
- 9 question make enquire, speculate: implies a question about both the future of the friend's beauty and its nature. Since in the octave all other mortal beauties have been revealed as unstable, perhaps this beauty, too, is already beginning to fade.
- 10 thou . . . go Ageing is seen as a journey, with future time as a desolate land. It is also hinted that the young man will 'waste' time, occupying himself well or, more probably, badly; cf. beauty's waste, 9.11.
- 11 sweets . . . forsake Things which are sweet and beautiful cease to be so.
- 12 die . . . grow picks up the opening line of the preceding sonnet, but with 12

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
 And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
 When I behold the violet past prime,
 And sable curls all silvered o'er with white:
 When lofty trees I see barren of leaves, 5
 Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
 And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
 Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard:
 Then of thy beauty do I question make,
 That thou among the wastes of time must go, 10
 Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
 And die as fast as they see others grow,
 And nothing 'gainst time's scythe can make defence
 Save breed to brave him, when he takes thee hence.

reversed emphasis: that stressed the speedy growth of a child, this the speedy decay of everyone and everything.

- 13 And nothing Unusually, the catalogue of loss extends to the penultimate line, making the remedy seem frail. However, sexual innuendo furnishes a more positive reading. The nothing which lies between women's legs (cf. Ham 3.2.115–17) can save, or preserve, the breed, or offspring, which will counteract the destructive force of time's scythe.

time's scythe a conventional image of death-as-reaper which recalls the harvest-as-death metaphors of lines 7–8

- 14 breed . . . him children, to defy the unstoppable advance of time: the loss of what was brave in l. 2 is here countered by the defiant or splendid confrontation of loss.

4 all silvered] Malone; or siluer'd Q; o'er-silver'd IR; ensilvered Oxf o'er] Malone; ore Q; all IR
 7 summer's] Sommers 8 bier] beare 11 themselves] them-selues 13 time's scythe] Times sieth

- 13 This poem develops the theme of personal affection between poet and youth, introduced in sonnet 10. Adopting an intimate mode of address, the poet warns him that his present identity will be lost if he does not renew it in children.
- 1 Yourself! But Q places only a comma between 'selfe' and 'but', leaving the phrase 'but loue you are' susceptible of being read as 'you are love incarnate'; but dear my love in l. 13 suggests that here, too, love is vocative. The first sentence could be paraphrased as 'O that your identity were absolute and permanent.'
- 2 yours sustaining your own identity: for a comparable (though different) analysis of the instability of identity, cf. AC 4.14.1–14.
here live live here, in the world; with possible play on 'heir'
- 3 Against in anticipation of; in defence against this coming end the end of your life
- 4 sweet semblance beautiful appearance; but the word semblance, with its connotations of 'seeming', suggests something fragile and provisional about this beauty some other a child; with subsidiary sense of a wife, to whom the young man's beauty would be 'given' in a different sense
- 5 hold in lease hold by leasehold, i.e. possess only on a temporary basis; there may also be a pun on 'leese', archaic form of 'lose'; cf. 5.14.
- 6 determination end, with connotations of the end of a legal agreement; cf. OED 1b, 'The cessation of an estate or interest of any kind'.
were subjunctive: would be
- 9 so . . . house such a beautiful exterior as the young man's body; and such an aristocratic lineage, as in beauteous roof, 10.7
- 10 husbandry frugal management; and being a husband, as in marriage might has the power to
- 11–12 the . . . cold continues the seasonal imagery of the preceding sonnet, with the ageing process seen as the assault of a single winter's day, leading to the empty anguish of death's eternal cold. Barren rage suggests posthumous frustration: after death the youth may remember, too late, that he has left no issue.
- 13 unthrifths foolish prodigals; cf. 9.9.
dear . . . know refers both forward and back: 'only unthrifths would neglect their inheritance, as I have already told you'; and 'as you well know, you had a father'. There is a further suggestion that 'you know my love to be dear (valuable)', thus distinguishing the poet and youth, in their dear, or valuable, friendship, from unthrifths.

13

O that you were yourself! But, love, you are
 No longer yours, than you yourself here live;
 Against this coming end you should prepare,
 And your sweet semblance to some other give:
 So should that beauty which you hold in lease 5
 Find no determination; then you were Yourself again after yourself's decease,
 When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
 Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
 Which husbandry in honour might uphold 10
 Against the stormy gusts of winter's day
 And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
 O none but unthrifts, dear my love you know:
 You had a father; let your son say so.

7 Yourself] You selfe Q; Your self *Benson, Cam*⁷ 14 father] Father son] Son

- 14 The poet claims that he has knowledge of the stars, but not of superstitious astrology, being directed by his friend's eyes, which tell him that in him alone lies responsibility for the future survival of truth and beauty. The identification of the beloved's eyes with stars is Petrarchan, but Shakespeare may have been specifically responding to Sidney's AS, 26, in which the speaker defends his own brand of 'astrology', governed by 'those two stars in Stella's face'.
- 1 pluck pull out, extract, with a slightly comic tone; cf. R3 1.1.55.
- 2 I have astronomy I have knowledge of astronomy.
- 5 fortune . . . tell predict the future with reference to precise (and fleeting) moments
- 6 forecasting weather by assigning particular conditions to precise (and fleeting) moments
- 7 with. . . well whether it will go well with princes: phrases inverted, perhaps for the sake of rhyme, or perhaps to suggest the ponderousness of a conventional astrologer
- 8 aught predict Though Q's 'oft predict' has been defended by previous editors, as suggesting 'frequent predictions', as Booth points out, 'oft is almost never used as an adjective, and this is the only recorded use of predict as a noun'. In addition, 'frequent predictions' suggests something facile and easy, rather than discerning. Charles Gildon's suggestion of aught predict = 'anything that I find predicted' (Rollins, 1.39) makes good sense. A compositor could easily hear or misread 'ought' as 'oft', and in some speech it is possible that 'ought' had a vocalized 'f'; cf. Dobson, 2.946–7.
- 10 constant . . . art Your eyes are steadfast guides (constant stars), in which I discern such skill in divination, or matter for divination.
- 11 As demonstrative: as; that
- 12 continues the previous sonnet's focus on the youth's self, or individual characteristics, which, if transformed (converted) to store – to increase, multiplicity (cf. 11.9 and n.) – will ensure the flourishing continuance of truth and beauty. For the art . . . convert rhyme, cf. 11.4n.
- 14 When you are dead, truth and beauty will also come to an end. For date, cf. OED 5, 'The limit, term or end of a period of time'. Cf. Raleigh's reply to Marlowe's 'Passionate Shepherd': 'Had joyes no date, nor age no need' (see Raleigh, 15–17, for both poems). Shakespeare used the conceit of all beauty being encompassed in the love object frequently in VA, as at 11–12, or 1019–20; cf. also PT 62–4: 'Truth may seem, but cannot be; / Beauty brag, but 'tis not she; / Truth and beauty buried be.'

14

Not from the stars do I my judgement pluck;
 And yet, methinks, I have astronomy,
 But not to tell of good or evil luck,
 Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality;
 Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell, 5
 Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind;
 Or say with princes if it shall go well
 By aught predict that I in heaven find;
 But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
 And, constant stars, in them I read such art 10
 As truth and beauty shall together thrive
 If from thyself, to store thou wouldst convert:
 Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
 Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

5 minutes] mynuits 7 princes] Princes 8 aught] this edn; oft Q 13] not indented in Q 14 truth's]
 Truthes beauty's] Malone; Beauties Q

- 15 Viewing the instability of all mortal things (as in sonnet 12), the poet sees that youth, too, is subject to age and decay. He attempts to renew his friend's beauty by means of verbal wit.
- 1 consider everything consider that everything
- 3 this . . . shows The idea of the whole world as a theatre was commonplace in the Renaissance, and was given local definition for Shakespeare by the opening of the Globe Theatre in 1599. Cf. AYL 2.7.137–65. The implication is that human activities are no more than (empty) shows, superficial and delusory.
- 4 the . . . comment reverting to the idea of astronomy in the preceding sonnet; suggests that the stars, as audience to the theatre of the world, comment on and guide human life, but in ways that are undiscernible to us (secret)
- 6 Cheered cheerèd; = encouraged, heartened checked Cf. 'sap checked with frost', 5.7 and n.
- 7 Vaunt exult, rejoice
- 8 wear . . . memory disappear until their glory is no longer remembered; cf. KL 4.6.13, 'This great world / Shall so wear out to naught'. Brave state = splendid condition; cf. 12.2 and n.
- 9 the . . . stay the perception of this unstable condition of the world
- 10 you . . . youth another play on the friend's self or quintessence: you . . . youth makes youth, a temporary attribute, seem integral to the addressee – part of his 'you-ness'.
- 11 Where in his mind's eye (sight), where the youth himself is subject of a 'show', or miniature drama wasteful . . . decay Wasteful time – time that lays things waste, and is itself wasted – and decay are two aspects of the same process, and there is no real doubt that the youth will be subjected to their operation: so perhaps they 'debate' only in the sense of engaging in discussion; or time and decay contend or compete, as in all in war in l. 13. Alternatively, with decay may be attached to To change, = 'time deliberates how to change you by making you decay'.
- 12 sullied night implies not only that age (night) will succeed youth (day), but that the young man will become morally corrupted
- 13 all in war The subject is presumably the I of the following line, who has declared all-out war on time for the sake of his friend.
- 14 Another image of the simultaneous processes of decay and growth; cf. 11.1 and 12.12. This time the stress is on regeneration. The primary image, building on men as plants in l. 5, is from horticulture, in which, by means of 'grafting', a cutting from one plant is made to grow on another: this is analogous to what the poet does in making the youth's 'parts' live afresh in his sonnets, as well as in persuading him to join himself to a wife. But there is also an ingenious pun, not noticed before. The poet engages in a continuous process of writing, or engraving, so that the repeated 'you' sounds (you . . . youth . . . youth . . . you . . . you . . . you) in ll. 10–14 are converted, by the addition of an 'n', into the sound new. The effect is of a word-game, in which time's removal of -th from youth, leaving a bare you, is outsmarted by the poet's conversion of the word into new.

- 16 Continuing from the end of the preceding sonnet, the poet suggests that procreation will renew the young man's image more accurately and powerfully than verbal artistry. Discussed in great detail by Booth, xi–xvii.
- 1 a mightier way more powerfully than through the poet's 'grafting', 15.14
- 3 fortify strengthen
- 4 means . . . rhyme Marriage is a more blessed form of renewal than writing partly because it offers 'bliss', or happiness, in addition to the 'blessing' of children. The poet's verse is barren not necessarily because it is uninventive (though cf. 26.5. and 76.1), so much as because it can generate only verbal images of the youth, not living children.
- 5 At present you are at the peak of your capacity for giving and receiving pleasure; yet hours have already been shown to be treacherous: cf. 5.1.
- 6–7 many . . . flowers continues the image of men as plants from the preceding sonnet: many virtuous young women, as yet unmarried and childless (to 'set' = to sow and germinate seeds), would gladly bear your children. Gardening was a conventional image for fathering children, even in aristocratic circles: cf., e.g., a 1596 letter from the Spanish agent Antonio Perez to Penelope Rich, then pregnant, with greetings to her pregnant sister and sister-in-law: 'she gave yow not those delicate shapes to kepe them ydle, but rather that you shoulde pushe fourthe unto us here many bud-des of those dyvine bewties. To those Gardners [the three husbands] I wysse all happines for so good tyllage of their grounds' (Ungerer, 1.90–2). It should also be remembered that Priapus was the tutelary deity of gardens.
- 8 Your children will resemble you more closely than an artificial image, whether a painted portrait or a verbal (flattering?) description; also 'with greater liking'.
- 9 lines of life the outlines or features of your living children; lines of descent: for a perhaps over-elaborate glossing of the phrase, see Empson, 54–5.
- that life repair restore; renew; replicate you to the life
- 10 this appears to be defined by the phrases in the rest of the line, placed in parentheses in Q; but also, as in 18.14, 'this sonnet which you are reading now'
- time's . . . pen A 'pencil' was a bunch of hairs used as a paintbrush; figuratively, it could be 'transferred to word-painting or descriptive skill' (OED 1a and b). Time has painted the youth in bringing him to his present state of perfection; the poet, in writing, can hope to copy this creation only partially, and in this sense is his pupil. It is disconcerting, after the declaration of war on time in ll. 1–2, to find the poet acknowledging subservience to this bloody tyrant, especially since time's pencil will deface the beauty it has created.
- 11 fair fairness, beauty
- 12 Cf. 13.1. Neither time nor the poet can transmit the true living essence of the young man to (future) men.
- 13 If he 'gives' himself in marriage to a woman, he will sustain his identity in a stable condition. Still suggests both 'yet' and 'motionless' – the fluidity of his identity will be counteracted.
- 14 drawn . . . skill (if you are) delineated by your own ability; he will make war on time by making love.

16

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, time,
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours, 5
And many maiden gardens, yet unset,
With virtuous wish would bear your living flowers,
Much liker than your painted counterfeit:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, time's pencil or my pupil pen, 10
Neither in inward worth nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men:
 To give away yourself keeps yourself still,
 And you must live drawn by your own sweet skill.

10 this, time's . . . pen,] this (Times . . . pen)

- 17 The last of the sonnets explicitly recommending procreation: living descendants of the addressee will demonstrate to future ages the truth of the claims made for him by the poet.
- 2 If has here some of the force of 'though': it is implied that the youth's merits transcend what can be shown in art; yet even if they were fully shown, they would not be credited. filled Q's 'fil'd' has been modernized as filled, but the possibility of a play on 'filed', = polished, rhetorically refined, cannot be excluded; cf. Introduction, p.97.
- 3 it . . . tomb There has been an interesting shift from the suggestion of 4.13 that the young man is self-tombing to the notion that the poet is constructing a tomb for him. Collections of verse were often described as 'monuments', following Horace; cf. Spenser's description of his Epithalamion (1595) as 'for short time an endlesse moniment' (Epithalamion, 433: Shorter Poems, 679).
- 4 your life your living essence parts 'abilities, capacities, talents' (OED 12). The poet's verse not only gives an incomplete image of the youth, it fails to do justice to his true merits, even as a funeral monument would offer only a partial image of the deceased.
- 5 write express in written words; but also write the words 'the beauty of your eyes'
- 6 in . . . number enumerate in new verses: numbers = metrical feet or, by extension, verses; cf. LLL 4.3.57, 'These numbers will I tear, and write in prose'. Fresh numbers also suggests 'in currently fashionable verse forms, such as the sonnet'; and the sonnets we are reading are themselves 'numbered'.
- 8 heavenly touches celestial brushstrokes or artistically rendered features: cf. AYL 5.4.27, 'Some lively touches of my daughter's favour'; and strained touches, 82.10. 'Touches' can also denote sexual contact.
- 9 my papers metonym for the poet's verses, identified with specific pieces of paper on which he has written them. No accommodation is made for fresh transcriptions or printings. We should remember Meres's phrase about Shakespeare's 'sugred Sonnets among his private friends' (see Introduction, p. 1). Whatever the date of the sequence in its 1609 Q form, Shakespeare must have been aware of working copies of some of his sonnets that were already over ten years old.
- 10 old . . . tongue The loquaciousness of old men was a commonplace; cf. Aristotle, Rhetoric, 2.13; or Sidney's elderly Kalandar: 'nature loves to exercise that part most which is least decayed – and that is our tongue' (NA, 23). The suggestion is both that the verses' 'yellowed papers' have aged and lost authority, and that they are the work of an old and/or old-fashioned poet.
- 11 true rights what is truly your due; with a possible pun on 'rites', or appropriate ceremonies
a poet's rage furor poeticus, the product of a (suspect) state of poetic inspiration
- 12 stretched . . . song. The strained, or false, measures of an out-of-date poem; cf. OED stretched 4a, with this example. Antique suggests both 'old' and, as in 'antic', 'grotesque or eccentric'; cf. Hamlet's 'antic disposition', Ham 1.5.172.
stretched stretched
- 14 twice . . . rhyme Q's punctuation, with no break after twice, but a comma after it, suggests that the young man may live a second life in his child, and a second (or third) life in the poet's numbers. Though Booth defends this reading, it seems to the present editor confusing rather than convincing.

17

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were filled with your most high deserts?
Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb,
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts:
If I could write the beauty of your eyes, 5
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, 'This poet lies;
Such heavenly touches ne'er touched earthly faces.'
So should my papers (yellowed with their age)
Be scorned, like old men of less truth than tongue, 10
And your true rights be termed a poet's rage,
And stretched metre of an antique song;
 But were some child of yours alive that time,
 You should live twice: in it, and in my rhyme.

- 18 Despite the claim in the preceding sonnet that the poetic affirmation of the youth's beauty and virtue will not be believed in future ages without the confirming evidence of progeny, the poet now proceeds to affirm these excellences in terms which refer more explicitly to poetry than to progeny.
- 2 temperate well tempered or moderated, steering a middle course between extremes
- 3 darling . . . May The image of often-spoiled spring blossom hints at early death or young love blighted: cf. TGV 1.1.42–5; or Imogen's lines in Cym 1.4.35–7: 'comes in my father, / And like the tyrannous breathing of the north, / Shakes all our buds from growing'.
- 4 summer's . . . date Summer has only a temporary and too brief tenancy (leasehold) on nature.
- 5 the . . . heaven the sun
- 6 his may represent either 'its' or 'his'; but, given the comparison with the fair youth, a conception of the sun as also a beautiful male (Phoebus Apollo) seems apt.
- 7 every . . . declines Everything and everyone that is beautiful eventually becomes less so, or ceases to be beautiful at all: sometime suggests either occasional deviation – a beautiful person who has an 'off day' – or a moment after which a process of irreversible deterioration sets in. The first fair may allude particularly to fair women; see note on the next line. For the second fair, = fairness, beauty, cf. 16.11. The word declines suggests the sun's declension, or setting.
- 8 encompasses both accidental and cyclical decay, untrimmed suggesting both 'stripped of ornaments, or trimmings' and 'set off balance'; for the second, cf. OED trim 13a, 'to distribute the load of (a ship or boat) so that she floats on an even keel'. There may also be an allusion to menstruation, or 'monthly courses' (OED 27), in nature's changing course, implying that the youth transcends the physiological variability of female love-objects.
- 10 fair fairness, as in from fair at l. 7
- ow'st own, possess; but with a subsidiary implication of owe = are obliged to pay, as in the concept of death as a debt to nature
- 11 his shade the darkness of death, as in 'the valley of the shadow of death', Psalm 23.4
- 12 in . . . grow'st The primary suggestion is of lines of verse which, pace 17.1–12, will endure until the end of time. The word growest may seem inapplicable to poetry, suggesting, rather, 'lines of descent', with 'growing' children; yet the final couplet does not support this. Lines has also been associated with the threads of life spun by the Fates (Booth et al.).
- 14 this this sonnet; or, more broadly, this work of art, Shakespeare's Sonnets

18

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines, 5
And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimmed:
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st, 10
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade
When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st:
 So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
 So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

1 summer's] Summers 4 summer's] Sommers 7 sometime] some-time 9 summer] Sommer
11 wander'st] wandr'st

- 19 Contending with time, as in 15.13–14, the poet gives him permission to erode and destroy everything in nature except his young friend; however, as he claims in the couplet, even when destroyed by time his love will live young in art.
- 1–7 The injunction to time is analogous to Luc 936–59.
- 1 Devouring time ‘Time devours all things’ (Tilley, T326); from the much-quoted Latin phrase tempus edax rerum (Ovid, Met., 15.234); cf. also Per 2.3.45–8.
- 2 make . . . brood The earth’s consumption of her own children was also a commonplace.
- 4 The Phoenix was believed to live for half a millennium, then burn itself on a fire ignited by the sun, from which it was born anew to start the cycle afresh (cf. Lactantius’s poem De Ave Phoenixe). The implication here may be that time has this poet’s permission to burn the Phoenix for ever, without self-renewal.
- 5 Make . . . seasons While positive and negative aspects of time’s work alternated in lines 1–4, there is now a sense of its operation speeding up, with ‘glad and sorry seasons’ coming in quick succession.
- 7 sweets pleasures, sweet things; cf. 12.11
- 9 carve . . . hours do not, with the passage of time, put lines on my friend’s face; there may also be a suggestion of wrinkles forming divisions on the face, like lines marking hours on a clock face.
- 10 no lines Time’s unwelcome lines are in contrast to the poet’s eternal lines in 18.12.
- antique pen an old pen, but also one that produces grotesque or fanciful effects; cf. 17.12 and n.
- 11 course either ‘natural progress’, or ‘pursuit’, as in hunting
- untainted unsullied, untouched; but also uninjured; cf. OED 2a, and TN 3.4.56, ‘sure the man is tainted in’s wits’.
- allow license, permit
- 13 old Time both descriptive and familiar: the poet acknowledges time’s antiquity, with capitalization that may be authorial, but also, as he approaches his solution to the problem of time’s power, feels able to address him colloquially as an ‘old fellow’.
- 14 My love primarily ‘him whom I love’, as in l. 9; but with a subsidiary suggestion of ‘the love I feel’

19

Devouring time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived Phoenix in her blood;
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st, 5
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed time,
To the wide world and all her fading sweets:
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime,
O carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen; 10
Him in thy course untainted do allow
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet do thy worst, old Time, despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

1 lion's] Lyons 3 tiger's jaws] Tygers yawes 9 hours] howers 13 despite] dispight

- 20 You look more beautiful than a woman, but you are superior to a woman both in constancy and in allure; Nature fell in love with you, giving you male genitals which equip you to give pleasure to women, but your primary devotion must still be to me. A famously puzzling sonnet, which has often been taken to exonerate Shakespeare from any imputation of homoerotic passion. However, it can be read as suggesting the exact opposite, both because its naivety is too simple to be believed ('because we are both men we can have no physical congress'), and because its language is slippery and self-subverting; cf. note on l. 12. The placement of this anatomical sonnet at 20 may allude to a traditional association of this figure with the human body, equipped with twenty digits; see Introduction, p. 101.
- 1 with . . . hand created by nature herself; but the word painted bears connotations of false or superficial beauty, as in 21.2 or 83.1–4, which are not completely purged by the succeeding lines. The handiwork of nature, who uses her own hand, is implicitly contrasted with that of time, who uses such implements as a scythe (12.13), a pencil (16.10) or an antique pen (19.10).
- 2 master mistress suggests both double gender and double allegiance, as in feudal loyalty and/or courtly love; cf. 'Lord of my love', 26.1. The young man may also 'master mistresses', i.e. inspire devotion superior to that bestowed on women.
- 3–4 not . . . change refers to the misogynist commonplace that all women are fickle: cf. 'Women are as wavering as the wind' (Tilley, W698). There is also a pun concealed in not acquainted, = 'not equipped with a "quaint" (cunt)' (the word was used in this form by Florio as late as 1598); and a possible one in shifting change, for to shift, OED 9, means to change clothes, especially underclothes, and women, because of menstruation, have a special familiarity with 'changing shifts'.
- of women, who are all false. It would be pleasanter to take this as applying only to 'those women who are false', not women in general; but the context will hardly allow it.
- 5 less . . . rolling Though the primary suggestion is that the youth's eyes do not roll at all, are not untrustworthy, there could also be an implication that even his eyes are to some extent false in rolling, only not so much so as if he were a woman. For an example of male eyes rolling in a suspect manner, cf. Oth 5.2.38, 'you are fatal then / When your eyes roll so'.
- 6 Gilding Making everything seem gold, the eye being imagined as emitting light, like the sun. Like painted in l. 1, Gilding introduces some associations with false or deceptive appearance; cf. Mac 2.2.56: 'If he do bleed, / I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal / That it may seem their guilt.'
- 7 At this time 'hue' denoted either 'form, aspect', or 'external appearance of the face' (OED 1a and 2). Given the opening image of A woman's face, the second seems most applicable; the sestet then opens with a correctio of ll. 1–2: 'A man in facial appearance, who has all the varieties of appearance under his control'. Controlling may have some of the connotations of 'controller', OED 1 and 2, a steward or household officer; cf. the distinction made in 94.7–8 between those who are 'Lords and owners of their faces' and those who are merely 'stewards' of them. He 'controls' all hues both by exemplifying them and – anticipating the following line – by causing the hues of those who see him to be transformed by love and amazement. There may be a pun on 'hews' / 'whose'; and possibly some further pun is signalled by Q's italicization of 'Hews', though the suggestion of Oscar Wilde and others that it alludes to an actor or other person called William Hughes (Rollins, 2.183–4) lacks supporting evidence.
- 8 Which refers either to the man or to his hue or both

20

A woman's face with nature's own hand painted
 Hast thou, the master mistress of my passion;
 A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
 With shifting change, as is false women's fashion;
 An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling, 5
 Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
 A man in hue, all hues in his controlling,
 Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth;
 And for a woman wert thou first created,
 Till nature as she wrought thee fell a-doting, 10
 And by addition me of thee defeated,
 By adding one thing to my purpose nothing:
 But since she pricked thee out for women's pleasure,
 Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

10 nature . . . a-doting The conceit has an Ovidian flavour, recalling such stories as that of Pygmalion falling in love with an image of his own making (Met., 10.260–92), but also Shakespeare's own narrative of VA.

11 by . . . defeated deprived me of you by adding male genitals

12 one . . . nothing The primary suggestion is that the added feature is of no value to the loving poet. But since nothing also referred to female genitalia (cf. 12.13 and n.) the line could yield a paradox that supports a homoerotic reading: 'the one thing that nature added is, for my purposes, equivalent to a woman's sexual parts'.

13 she . . . out she chose you (cf. 2H4 3.2.110ff., in which Falstaff selects his military recruits by 'pricking' their names on a list); and 'she equipped you with a prick (penis)'

14 Put your love for me first, but let women enjoy sexual relations with you (and bear you children). For the sexual connotations of use, cf. 4.13–14; for treasure, 6. 3–4.

2 master mistress] *Cam*²; Master Mistris Q, Benson; master-mistress Malone 6 whereupon] where-vpon 7 hue] hew hues] Hews 10 a-doting] a dotinge 13 pricked] prickt

- 21 This poem is equivalent to Sidney's AS, sonnets 3, 6 and 15, in which wrong ways of writing love sonnets are dismissed. The speaker rejects the conceits of poets who habitually make extravagant comparisons with stars, jewels and flowers, in favour of truthful (and private?) cogency.
- 1 that Muse metonym for 'the poet inspired by that Muse': but with a lingering suggestion that that Muse might, unconventionally, be male
- 2 Stirred moved a painted beauty presumably contrasted with the face 'by nature's own hand painted' of the preceding sonnet; suggests a falsely adorned (female) mistress, who is both painted with cosmetics and painted with poetic metaphors
- 3 Who The subject is that Muse.
- 4 every . . . rehearse mentions or describes every beautiful thing in the world alongside his own beautiful (love object)
- 5 a . . . compare a linking, or coupling, made out of extravagant or exalted similes: compare = comparison; cf. TN 2.4.101. For couplement, cf. LLL 5.2.532 (RP).
- 6 sea's rich gems The sea was thought to conceal many precious jewels; cf. R3 1.4.26–32.
- 7 first-born Q's 'borne' permits a suggestion both of new-born flowers, and of the earliest ones 'borne' by plants in spring.
rare special, choice, exceptional
- 7–8 rare . . . air The internal rhyme, reinforced by the rhyme on are in lines 5, 7, 10 and 12, suggests the triteness of the other poet.
- 8 this huge rondure this great sphere of earth and heaven, from Fr. rondeur; a pretentious-sounding word, not used by Shakespeare elsewhere, which mimics the other poet's inflated diction
- 9 True in love can apply either to the poet or to his subject-matter: 'I, who am true in love . . .'; or 'let me write truly about what is true in love'.
- 11 any mother's child any human being; cf. MND 1.2.80, 3.1.75. The colloquial, humdrum character of the phrase contrasts with such grandiose words as couplement and rondure. It also, disconcertingly, undercuts the preceding sonnet's claim that the object of the poet's love has a beauty which is paramount and exceptional.
- 12 those gold candles the stars, with a possible allusion to Sidney's identification of the subject of his sonnet sequence as 'Stella', or Star. The rejection of conventional comparisons anticipates sonnet 130.
heaven's air The repetition of the phrase from l. 8 reflects the sonnet's concern with couplement; there may also be a buried pun on 'heaven's heir'.
- 13 hearsay second-hand gossip; what is heard but not seen
- 14 proverbial: cf. Tilley, P546. Presumably the suggestion is that the poet does not wish to vulgarize his love-object by larding him with public compliment, or to risk losing him.

21

So is it not with me as with that Muse,
 Stirred by a painted beauty to his verse,
 Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
 And every fair with his fair doth rehearse,
 Making a couplement of proud compare 5
 With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems;
 With April's first-born flowers and all things rare
 That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems;
 O let me true in love but truly write,
 And then believe me: my love is as fair 10
 As any mother's child, though not so bright
 As those gold candles fixed in heaven's air:
 Let them say more that like of hearsay well,
 I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

2 Stirred] Stird 5 couplement] Malone; coopelment Q 6 sun] Sunne moon] Moone
 7 first-born] Malone; first borne Q 13 hearsay] heare-say

- 22 This sonnet celebrates the loving dependence of the speaker on his friend and his appropriation of his friend's youthful beauty.
- 2 youth and thou Since the speaker has vacillated between addressing his friend as you and thou, there may be a pun here on youth = 'you-ness'; cf. 15.12 and n.
- of one date of the same age
- 3 behold shall behold
- 4 look I I anticipate
- expiate extinguish, bring to a close (OED 7)
- 5-7 Despite the disclaimers in 21, Shakespeare here uses a familiar poetic conceit, that of the exchange of hearts; cf. Sidney's lyric 'My true love hath my heart and I have his', which was already very popular in the late 1580s (OA, 45: Sidney, Poems, 75-6 and 406-7). Because the poet's heart is lodged inside his friend, he adopts his friend's beauty as his own seemly raiment.
- 9 wary cautious, careful, with perhaps a shade of OED 4, 'Careful in expenditure, thrifty, prudent'
- 9-10 be . . . will Be as careful of yourself as I shall be, or as I desire (will) to be on your own behalf, not on my own.
- 11 chary charily, carefully: chary and wary are here almost indistinguishable in sense, though the first is adjectival, the second adverbial.
- 12 He will keep his friend's heart as tenderly from harm as a nurse does her baby. The epithet tender, though directly applied to the nurse, seems partly reflected from the heart as a 'tender babe', and partly also suggests that the poet 'tenders', or treats, his friend's heart lovingly.
- 13 Presume not on do not expect to get back (your heart)

22

My glass shall not persuade me I am old
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate:
For all that beauty that doth cover thee 5
Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me;
How can I then be elder than thou art?
O therefore love be of thyself so wary
As I not for myself, but for thee will, 10
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill:
Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;
Thou gav'st me thine not to give back again.

3 furrows] Malone; forrwes Q

- 23 The poet cannot adequately express his love in speech, because of the intensity of his passion; he therefore implores his friend to read and respond to his written expressions of love.
- 1 an unperfect actor an actor who is not 'word perfect', does not know his lines correctly
- 2 is . . . part forgets his lines, loses his mastery of his role: 'part' was the technical term for the lines and cues to be learned by an actor.
- 3-4 some . . . heart some savage beast or a fiercely passionate human being, whose excess of passion collapses on itself
- 5 for . . . trust not able to trust myself; or nervous of the responsibility (position of trust) I am in
- 6 picks up unperfect from l. 1: 'the ceremony to which love is entitled' or 'the correct words that are required for the fulfilment of love's ritual', Q's right suggesting both 'right' and 'rite'
- 8 O'ercharged with weighed down with; and crushed with the 'charge' or responsibility
- mine . . . might the strength of the love I feel; the strength of my beloved
- 9 my books my writings, alluding either to Son, or more widely to other papers and writings; 'book' was also the normal term for the prompt-book from which a play was acted
- 10 dumb presagers silent indicators: to 'presage' normally carries connotations of foretelling the future, but in VA (457) Shakespeare applied it to Adonis' silent blush, an 'ill presage' of the words he is about to speak.
- 11 look for recompense look for an equal return of love
- 12 The subject is still my books, which look eagerly for a fuller return of love than might be yielded to a ready speaker who has spoken more fully and eloquently.
- 13 silent love Cf. Sidney, AS, 54.13-14: 'Dumb swans, not chattering pies, do lovers prove; / They love indeed, who quake to say they love.'
- 14 To . . . eyes negates the commonplace assertion that 'love is blind' (Tilley, L506): instead, love is claimed to read or to discern with sharpened insight (fine wit)

- 24 This is an elaboration of the idea of lovers 'looking babies' in each other's eyes (cf. OED baby 3). By looking closely into the speaker's eye, the young man can see a perfect image of himself, his own eyes being like a glass window; but he cannot see how much the poet loves him.
- 1 steeled formed a permanent image as if fashioned with or in steel: Capell's popular emendation to 'stell'd', though supported by the description of Hecuba in Luc 1444, 'a face where all distress is stell'd', seems unnecessary, and loses the association of steel with mirrors (cf. Gascoigne's The Steele Glas (1576)) and, possibly, with 'styled' = wrote or inscribed, a sense supported by Ingram and Redpath in IR. There may be a further play on 'stilled' = frozen, motionless; cf. still in l. 7.
- 2 table a writing tablet or flat surface on which a picture can be painted: for a comparable use, cf. 'our heart's table', AW 1.1.95. There may be an implication that the image is fixed in a 'table of steel'.
- 3 the frame probably not a decorative frame, but a supportive structure or framework, such as an easel
- 4 perspective . . . art The skill of the finest painter lies in his ability to suggest effects of distance. Though OED's earliest example of 'perspective' as 'showing the effect of distance' (II 3a.) is 1606, it appears to be the application here, with associations also of the commoner 'perspective glass' = an optical instrument for seeing things not accessible to normal view. The word perspective must be accented twice: perspective.
- 5 through the painter both by means of the painter and, more literally, through the painter-poet, whose eye is transparent
- 7 my bosom's shop a surprising image, coming so soon after the assertion at the end of sonnet 21, but the point of shop here seems to be not so much that the friend's image is offered for sale, but that it is stored and displayed; cf. OED 3c, 'a place where something is produced or elaborated . . . often said of the heart, liver or other internal bodily organs'. Cf. also the poem in G. Gascoigne's The Adventures of Master F.J. (1573) beginning 'Beautie shut up thy shop' (Gascoigne, 1.414).
still always
- 8 Your eyes are the glass windows through which my bosom is seen; probably with some play on 'glazing' and 'gazing', especially since 'glaze' could mean 'stare', as in JC 1.3.21
glazed glazèd
- 9 good turns Q's hyphenation draws attention to this as a familiar phrase. It could have sexual connotations, as in AC 2.5.58; but a more immediate parallel is offered by 47.1-2, where, again, good turns are associated with fashioning images of the beloved.
- 10 drawn delineated; extracted
- 11-12 the . . . peep The sun, in love with the young man, enjoys gazing out of his eyes and into those of the poet, in order to see the youth's reflected image. Behind the conceit lies the notion that the speaker loves the young man so much that 'the sun shines out of his eyes'; there may also be a side glance at the youth's role as son, not father, as in sonnets 1-17.
- 13 cunning skill, insight

24

Mine eye hath played the painter, and hath steeled
 Thy beauty's form in table of my heart;
 My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
 And perspective it is best painter's art;
 For through the painter must you see his skill, 5
 To find where your true image pictured lies,
 Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
 That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes:
 Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done:
 Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me 10
 Are windows to my breast, wherethrough the sun
 Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee;
 Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art:
 They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

1 steeled] steeld Q; stell'd Capell 3 'tis] ti's 4 painter's] Painters 5 painter] Painter 6 image]
 Image pictured] pictur'd 9 good turns] good-turns 11 wherethrough] where-through sun]
 Sun

- 25 This sonnet contrasts the speaker, a private and obscure man securely happy in his loving friendship, with court favourites whose fame and fortune may be lost in an instant. The image in ll. 9–12 of the popular war hero would apply well either to the Earl of Essex, to whose expected success in Ireland Shakespeare alluded in H5 (cf. also 125n.), or to his patron the Earl of Southampton, imprisoned and deprived of his rank for his part in the Essex rebellion in 1601.
- 1 in . . . stars lucky in their situation, blessed in their planetary influence; but also in positions of favour with the important people, or luminaries, on whom they depend
- 3 whom . . . bars who is denied by (ill) luck the possibility of boasting of worldly success; or who is excluded, through the chance of lowly status, from such glorious pageantry (triumph)
- 4 Unlooked for applies partly to joy – ‘I experience unexpected joy’ – partly to I – ‘I am overlooked, not in the public eye’ that . . . most what I, in contrast to the world in general, regard as most valuable: contrasted with the public honour of l. 2
- 5 princes’ In Elizabethan usage these could be female or male, so an allusion may be present either to Elizabeth I or to James I or both.
fair leaves Leaves (OED 2) were often petals rather than foliage; cf. IH6 4.1.92. Figuratively, the image suggests splendidly dressed courtiers glittering with silk and jewels.
- 6 as . . . eye The acknowledged characteristic of the Elizabethan marigold (roughly equivalent to the modern ‘pot marigold’) was that it opened and closed in response to the sun: cf. WT 4.4.105 and Luc 397.
- 7 Cf. the image of burial within a bud in l.11: the suggestion here is presumably that the pride of favourites, which appeared to be reinforced by external signs, is shut up uselessly within them.
- 8 at a frown Cf. ‘Fear no more the frown o’the great’, Cym 4.2.264.
- 9 painful painstaking; enduring pain (wounds) famously famous: = made famous
- 9–11 worth . . . quite The failure of ll. 9 and 11 to rhyme has prompted emendations of worth to ‘fight’ (Lewis Theobald) or ‘might’ (Capell), and of quite to ‘forth’ (Theobald) (Rollins, 1.73–4). Previous editors have generally accepted one of these three emendations in order to achieve a rhyme. However, none can be accounted for with reference to compositorial misreading or mishearing, and there are objections to all three. Either ‘might’ or ‘fight’ merely reinforces a point already made – the exemplum is of a court favourite who is a soldier; and ‘fight’ introduces a threefold alliteration on ‘f’ whose effect is somewhat ironical. Worth carries a very different sense – ‘deservedly famous’ – and suggests that even those courtiers advanced on the basis of merit (such, in Shakespeare’s eyes, may have been both Essex and Southampton) are subject to sudden falls. This seems too important a notion to be emended out of existence. Also, ‘razed forth’ would add another alliteration on ‘f’ as well as an assonance with forgot (12), and is a rather odd construction: elsewhere Shakespeare used either ‘raze’ simply, or ‘raze out’ (cf. R2 2.3.75, 3.1.25; 2H4 5.2.127; Mac 5.3.42; Cym 5.5.70). It is possible that Shakespeare, never a brilliant rhymester, left these lines imperfect.
- 10 foiled defeated; dishonoured, defiled
- 11 figuratively, expelled from the ranks of the nobility; but since honours were denoted by means of official court documents, there may also be a reference to the expunging from such records, or books of honours, of disgraced noblemen.
- razed razed
- 14 in a place from which I cannot move myself (remove), or be shifted by others

25

Let those who are in favour with their stars
 Of public honour and proud titles boast,
 Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
 Unlooked for joy in that I honour most;
 Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread 5
 But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
 And in themselves their pride lies buried,
 For at a frown they in their glory die.
 The painful warrior famoused for worth,
 After a thousand victories once foiled, 10
 Is from the book of honour razed quite,
 And all the rest forgot for which he toiled:
 Then happy I, that love and am beloved
 Where I may not remove, nor be removed.

5 princes'] Princes 6 marigold] Marygold 7 themselves] them-selves 9 famoused] famosed worth] might Capell 11 quite] forth Ard'

- 26 This is a sonnet with some of the character of a dedicatory epistle, in which the speaker stresses his limited skill and promises not to make his declaration public until he has received public approbation or advancement. Despite the speaker's claim to write in order to signal his duty, not to display his skill, it is marked by conspicuous elaboration, for instance in the carefully-disposed feminine rhymes in ll. 6, 8, 9-12, 13 and 14.
- 1 vassalage absolute subjection, servitude; cf. 58.4
- 2 Your excellence has made powerfully binding the obligation (duty) which I already owed you.
- 2-5 duty . . . duty . . . Duty an example of anadiplosis, 'when the same sound is repeated in the end of the sentence before, and in the beginning of the sentence following after' (Fraunce, 36-7)
- 3 this written embassage the sonnet itself, a formal written message which the friend is to read attentively (cf. 23.9). The phrase has courtly and chivalric associations, for it occurs in the account of the Iberian jousts in Sidney's Arcadia, which in turn is modelled on the late-Elizabethan Accession Day Tilts: 'then another from whose tent, I remember, a bird was made to fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies' (NA, 256) (E.E.D.-J.).
- 4 witness . . . wit Though he claims to write in order to declare his duty, not display rhetorical skill, the line itself, in the repetition of the syllable wit in two senses, offers an example of the rhetorical trope epanodos, 'when one and the same sound is repeated in the beginning and middle, or middle and end' (Fraunce, 46-7).
- 6 wanting . . . it Half-way through the twenty-sixth sonnet, it is evident that this poet is by no means short of words, but is adopting a pose of modesty: concealed finesses here are the pun on show it and 'show wit', and a rhyme on the implied but unspoken word 'poet'.
- 7 some . . . thine some favourable opinion; some rhetorical ingenuity or poetic elaboration (OED 4a and 8a). There may be an implication that the addressee is also a poet, or at least skilled in language.
- 8 (all naked) placed in parentheses in Q. The nakedness may be either that of the friend's soul, or of his soul's thought, or that of the speaker's own wit or duty. Possibly there is a paradoxical suggestion that what is naked in the friend - his most intimate and unvarnished impulse or thought - has the capacity to clothe, enrich and adorn his friend's unvarnished duty. bestow it The subject is still duty: bestow may suggest 'enrich'. The word was used analogously by Shakespeare in Tit 4.2.163 (and cf. OED 6c). Alternatively, bestow may = stow away, place (Glossary, 5): 'your good opinion will lodge my duty in your innermost thoughts'.
- 9 that The word is apparently superfluous, but underlines the speaker's uncertainty: 'whatever star it may be that . . . '.
- 10 Points on me directs its (favourable) beams towards me; cf. R2 1.3.146-7. fair aspect term from astrology, denoting 'favourable angle of astral influence'
- 11 my tattered loving uses the commonplace classical conceit that 'words are the clothes of the mind': because of his poor wit (l. 4) the speaker is unable to dress his love in the splendour which would be fitting for the lord of his love. 'Tattered' was often spelt 'tottered'; cf. 2.4.
- 12 thy sweet respect Q's 'their' is the first of fourteen apparent misreadings of thy as 'their'; cf. Jackson, 'Compositors'. The close similarity of sweet respect to fair aspect, suggests that the friend himself is the star which controls the speaker's life.
- 14 not . . . me not make myself conspicuous in places where you may put me to the test, or, perhaps, discover me

- 27 This is the first of a series of five sonnets in which the solitary poet meditates on his friend: 27–8 are on night and sleeplessness, a traditional motif in Petrarchan sonnet sequences; 29–30 on loneliness and failure, a more unusual theme; 31 expands the resolution of 30.
- 1 Weary with toil perhaps picked up from 'cum lassa quiete' (Ovid, Met., 15.188)
- 2 dear precious; 'to which one is greatly attached' (OED 4, 5) repose place of repose travail labour; travel: not clearly distinguished in Elizabethan spelling; cf. 32.2
- 3 journey possibly with a play on Fr. journée = day, or day-long task
- 4 work make it work; activate it
- 5 from . . . abide The source of his thoughts is a long way from where he lives.
- 6 Intend are purposefully fixed on: to 'intend a journey', from Lat. iter intendere, was a regular expression; cf. AC 5.2.201.
- 8 Looking The subject is still thoughts. which . . . see all the blind see is darkness.
- 9 Save except imaginary sight vision which is imaginative, not physical
- 10 thy another of Q's 'their' for 'thy' errors: cf. 26.12n.
- 11 like a jewel Some precious stones (especially carbuncles) were thought to be capable of emitting light; cf. Tit 2.3.226–30.
ghastly terrifying, deathly
- 12 Black is here equated with 'ugly', and night (Lat. nox, feminine) is thought of as an ugly old woman (cf. Michelangelo's sculpture in the Medici chapel in Florence). However, the final image of her old face being made new also suggests the appearance of the new moon after preceding moonless nights.
- 14 For . . . for on account of; on behalf of 27

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
 The dear repose for limbs with travail tired;
 But then begins a journey in my head
 To work my mind, when body's work's expired:
 For then my thoughts, from far where I abide, 5
 Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
 And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
 Looking on darkness which the blind do see;
 Save that my soul's imaginary sight
 Presents thy shadow to my sightless view, 10
 Which like a jewel hung in ghastly night
 Makes black night beauteous, and her old face new:
 Lo, thus by day my limbs, by night my mind,
 For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

5 from far] far from Malone 7 eyelids] eye-lids 10 thy] Capell; their Q 11 hung . . . night]
 (hunge . . . night)

- 28 Continuing the theme of the preceding sonnet, the speaker describes day and night, natural opposites, competing to prolong his anguish. The repeated rhymes on night in ll. 1, 3, 9 and 11 suggest the victim's claustrophobia, though not so insistently as Sidney's AS, 89, which has 'night' and 'day' as its only end-words.
- 1 happy plight cheerful condition
- 5-6 each . . . me Day and night are viewed as a pair of rival tyrants who nevertheless make a league (shake hands; cf. HS 5.2.133) to seal a bargain to torment the speaker. Shakespeare may have known Spenser's translation of J. van der Noot's Theatre for Worldlings (1569), which opens with a woodcut showing black and white dogs, representing day and night, attacking a white hind, symbolizing Petrarch's Laura.
- 7-8 to . . . toil Night tortures him by causing him to lament his growing distance from his friend.
- 9-12 Like Katherina in TS 4.5.7, the speaker tries to master his situation by means of absurd and blatant denial. He praises the sun for his brightness and compliment to his friend (him) even when the sun is concealed by clouds, and tells the night that she gilds the evening at a time when no stars twinkle (twire). It may appear initially that to please him refers to thee, the poet's friend; but the succeeding So flatter . . . indicates that at this point it is the sun that the speaker seeks to gratify.
- 11 swart-complexioned black-faced
- 13 draw draw out, extend
- 14 grief's length Capell's emendation of Q's length to 'strength' undermines the subtlety of the distinction between day and night: night makes the speaker's grief, already experienced as long-drawn-out, even more intense; it also eliminates the chiasmic pattern sorrows longer . . . length . . . stronger. The feminine rhymes of lines 13-14 reinforce the sense of prolongation.

- 29 Lonely and outcast, the speaker envies the prosperity and talent of others, until he remembers his friend, whose love compensates him for everything.
- 1 in disgrace lacking grace or favour
- 2 beweep lament, weep for; cf. KJ 1.4.324.
outcast state condition of being outcast, rejected
- 3 bootless hopeless, without remedy
- 4 look upon myself engage in self-contemplation
- 5 one . . . hope someone with better prospects, including prospects of wealth
- 6 Featured like him with features (by implication, beautiful) like his
- 7 art skill of any kind, not necessarily relating to creative art scope freedom, opportunity
- 8 least satisfied with the things of which I have most: what it is that the speaker 'most enjoys' is not indicated; perhaps his own skill with language.
- 10 Haply perhaps; with a suggestion also of 'happily'
- 10-11 my . . . arising Though this sonnet is not explicitly associated with night-time, as are 27 and 28, the comparison of his re-animated state to that of 'the lark at break of day' suggests relief and illumination discovered at dawn. Cf. Cym 3.20.
- 12 sullen earth dark, shadowy earth, with some connotations of melancholy (OED sullen 4a): this image, too, suggests that the meditation belongs to the hours of night.
sings . . . gate Instead of importuning heaven, as in l. 3, the speaker, or his state, now praises God.
- 13 thy . . . remembered the recollection of your sweet love for me; or the recollection of your sweet self, whom I love. However, there is a touch of undermining uncertainty in the word remembered, as if the speaker remembers his friend as loving him, but may not be in a position to know whether this love continues in the present.
- 14 change exchange kings plural; or plural possessive, 'kings'; or singular possessive, 'king's', = that of a king, e.g. James I, who may have enjoyed the company of the poet's friend at times when the poet did not; Q's capitalization reinforces the suggestion of allusion to a particular monarch.

29

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes
I all alone bewEEP my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heav'n with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope, 5
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state, 10
Like to the lark at break of day arising,
From sullen earth sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

1 fortune] Fortune 2 outcast] out-cast 3 heav'n] heauen 6 Featured] Featur'd possessed] possest 11 Like . . . arising,](Like . . . arising) lark]Larke 12 heaven's] Heauens 14 kings] Kings

- 30 Still in solitude, the poet takes stock of his past losses and failures, rendered in legal and financial metaphors, weeping for them afresh, until he thinks, consolingly, of his friend.
- 1 sessions judicial proceedings or formal examination, with a play on the older meaning of 'session', 'the state or posture of being seated' (OED 1a)
- 2 summon up cause to appear as if in a judicial investigation; with a play on 'sum' (v.) = enumerate, call to financial account
- remembrance . . . past Cf. Wisdom of Solomon (OT Apocrypha), 11.12, 'For a double griefe came upon them, and a groaning for the remembrance of things past' (E.E.D.-J.)
- 3 sigh sigh for
- 4 dear time's waste the expiry of time that was loved by him, or valuable to him: to 'waste time' did not always have adverse connotations; cf. VA 24, AYL 2.4.95.
- 5 unused to flow Cf. Othello's description of his eyes as 'unused to the melting mood' (Oth 5.2.35) when in a vein of reminiscence and retrospection.
- 6 dateless night night that will never come to an end; cf. 14.14 and n.: suggests that legal restrictions are not here applicable
- 7 cancelled another legal term, denoting bonds which are no longer valid; cf. l. 12
- 8 th'expense loss, with financial associations (OED 1b, with this example)
- 9 grievances sorrows, traumas, which have gone before, belong to the past; perhaps also grievances for which, until now, he has foregone to grieve (cf. OED forgo, forego 5, 6)
- 10 heavily laboriously, sadly
- from . . . o'er count, enumerate each sorrow, woe to woe suggesting "'o" to "o"', and an account book full of (a) groans; (b) empty figures, noughts; and for 'tell o'er' as 'enumerate (griefs)', cf. Oth 3.3.171-2: 'O, what damned minutes tells he o'er / Who dotes yet doubts, suspects yet strongly loves.'
- 11 account narrative; financial reckoning
- fore-bemoaned moan the closeness of the phrase to grievances foregone only two lines before enacts the repetitive grieving that is described.
- fore-bemoaned fore-bemoanèd
- 13 dear friend picks up 'dear time' in l. 4: the friend's 'dearness', or value, compensates for all previous sorrows.

30

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
 I summon up remembrance of things past,
 I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
 And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste;
 Then can I drown an eye (unused to flow) 5
 For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
 And weep afresh love's long since cancelled woe,
 And moan th'expense of many a vanished sight.
 Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
 And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er 10
 The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
 Which I new pay, as if not paid before;
 But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
 All losses are restored, and sorrows end.

1 sessions] Sessions 5 unused] vn-vs'd 7 afresh] a fresh cancelled] canceld foregone] fore-gon
 13 thee, dear friend,] thee (deare friend)

- 31 The young man is universally loved, and in the congress of those who love him the lonely poet imaginatively recovers his own lost (dead?) friends.
- 1 bosom heart, seat of intimate emotions; used as a synecdoche for the youth as a whole. For its associations with close male friendship, cf. MV 1.3.16–18: 'this Antonio / Being a bosom lover of my lord, / Must needs be like my lord'.
- 1–4 endeared . . . supposed . . . buried The 'e' is sounded in the last syllable of all three words, making an emphatic assonance with dead in ll. 2 and 7.
- 2 No longer enjoying the popularity that the youth does, the speaker has believed his friends to be dead, and/or the capacity for love to be extinct.
- 3 all . . . parts all the aspects and capacities of love
- 5 holy . . . tear a tear of devotion shed as part of an 'obsequy', or funeral: cf. Tit 1.1.160, 'My tributary tears / I render for my brother's obsequies'.
- 6 religious Cf. OED 4a, 'Scrupulous, exact, strict, conscientious'.
stol'n Tears are paid or exacted, like coins; for another application of this metaphor, cf. Donne, 'A Valediction: Of Weeping', 1–9 (Donne, 89).
- 7 interest continues the image of tears as coins; they are the return or reward owed to dead friends.
- which The subject is all those friends.
- 8 But things removed but as things which have moved; 'remove' was commonly used intransitively.
- thee Charles Gildon's emendation of Q's 'there' (Rollins, 1.90–1) carries conviction: 'there' may be a compositorial misreading comparable with the many 'their'/'thy' errors; cf. 26.12n. Though 'there' makes perfectly good sense – 'in thy bosom' – it sounds clumsy, and does not lead on so neatly as thee to the Thou of the sestet.
- 9 Thou . . . grave Contrast 1.11–14, in which the youth was his own grave, and was reproached rather than praised for so being: the young man's bosom is now viewed as a spacious memorial chapel or mausoleum.
- 10 the . . . gone Trophies suggests symbolic relics of past victories, such as helmets or battle honours. Here they probably correspond with 'their parts of me' in the following line, the suggestion being that the speaker's past triumphs in love are now transferred to the young man. Lovers need not carry any erotic charge, and may simply denote 'those who once loved me', as in Psalms, 38.11, 'My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my sore: and my kinsmen stand afar off'.
- 11 their . . . me the parts of me that belonged to them: presumably, his love, as in love's loving parts in l. 3
- 12 due of many what was both owed by, and paid to, many: cf. the world's due, 1.14. If this connection is made, an implication may be discovered that the young man is selfish or greedy in gathering such diverse expressions of love into himself.
- 13 Their . . . loved the images of those whom I loved: images may denote a picture or copy, or, conceivably, a ghost (OED 4a and b; 5); and cf. Ham 1.1.8, 'our last king / Whose image even but now appeared to us'.
- 14 thou . . . me You, who encompass or encapsulate all those who love you, also possess everyone whom I have ever loved or been loved by: you also possess my inmost essence – all the all. Booth (176–8) raises, but eventually discards, the possibility that all has a sexual sense.

- 32 If the young man outlives the poet, he may come to view his verse as old-fashioned, but is implored to cherish it for the devotion it conveys.
- 1 well-contented day the day when he pays his debt to nature in full: for 'content' in this sense (OED 4a) cf. Oth 3.1.1, 'Masters, play here, I will content your pains'. It is also a day with which he will be well-contented, i.e. satisfied, uncomplaining. For 'content' (adj.) in both senses, cf. Shylock's last line, MV 4.1.390.
- 3 by fortune by luck; by (good) fortune
- 4 deceased deceased
lover the man who once loved you: not necessarily with erotic connotations; cf. 31.10n.
- 5 the bett'ring . . . time the improvement made in subsequent time; by implication, poems which reflect this improvement
- 6 every pen Cf. every alien pen, 78.3.
- 7 Reserve preserve; keep in a separate or private place
- 7-8 their . . . men Rhyme, though a rhyme-word, acts as a synecdoche for 'literary style': the poor rude lines of the poet will be transcended by the high style of more fortunate (happier) writers.
- 11 If the poet had lived to develop a more sophisticated and up-to-date style, his love would have generated poems of more value (dearer). Whereas in sonnet 17 the poet anticipates the young man dying without progeny, their positions here are reversed, with the youth (supposedly) imagining the poet dying without worthy poetic offspring.
- 12 The primary image is military: the better poems that may be produced in a later age could have kept better company, with superior weaponry or equipment. There may also be a suggestion of more sophisticated poetic structures, with ranks, or successive lines of verse, organized in subtler or more complicated fashion, as, perhaps, in Donne's Songs and Sonnets. Shakespeare may also have been thinking of Sidney's criticism of the shapeless work of English poets, who write anything they think of, 'never marshalling it into any assured rank, that almost the readers cannot tell where to find themselves' (Prose, 112).
- 13 better prove turn out to be better
- 14 style I'll The internal rhyme, underlined by Q's spelling, seems to mock the supposedly greater finesse of subsequent poets.

- 33 This sonnet and the following one treat of disappointment and betrayal, expressed in imagery of sun and cloud. The two are closely connected: for instance, in 33 the friend endures disgrace at the end of line 8; in 34, the poet.
- 1-8 The poet's experience is commonplace; cf. Tilley, S978, 'The morning sun never lasts a day.'
- 2 Flatter . . . sovereign Some reversal of traditional roles is suggested: most often courtiers flatter sovereigns; but this sovereign, a sun/son, flatters (deceives) inferiors.
- 3 Kissing . . . face A kiss bestowed by face, not lips, appears richly beneficent.
- 4 heavenly alchemy divine, or else merely pertaining to the sky/heavens: alchemy was suspect to most intelligent Elizabethans, and Q's phonetic spelling, 'alcumy', suggests the indiscriminate nature of the sun's blessing, bestowed on 'all comers'.
- 5 ride The clouds are upstart cavaliers, beggars on horseback; as they cross the sun's face they may also figure lines or wrinkles: cf. Fr. se rider, to become wrinkled.
- 6 ugly rack rack = 'a mass of clouds driven before the wind in the upper air' (OED 3a); the word is cognate with 'wrack' or 'wreck', suggesting an obstruction that is at once ruinous and fragile.
- 7 forlorn Metre requires stress on the first syllable, and Q's 'for-lorne' may also indicate it.
- 8 disgrace disfigurement, and consequent shame
- 11 alack Note the internal rhyme with rack in 6.
- 12 region belonging to the upper air, governed by the 'sovereign' sun: cf. Ham 2.2.487.
- 14 Suns . . . world Only when the end of the line is reached does it become apparent that the poet's exaltation of his friend as my sun has become reductive, for he is, punningly, 'a son of the world', a morally corrupt worldling, not a divine being. stain primarily intransitive, = receive stain; but as the ensuing sonnet indicates, the sun-friend's stain also 'stains' the poet - injures him irreversibly.

33

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
 Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
 Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
 Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
 Anon permit the basest clouds to ride 5
 With ugly rack on his celestial face,
 And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
 Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
 Even so my sun one early morn did shine
 With all triumphant splendour on my brow; 10
 But out alack, he was but one hour mine,
 The region cloud hath masked him from me now.
 Yet him for this, my love no whit disdaineth:
 Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

4 gilding] Guilding alchemy] alcumy 7 forlorn] for-lorne 9 sun] Sunne 10 all triumphant] all-triumphant Ard' 12 masked] mask'd

- 34 This sonnet continues the theme and imagery of 33, with the speaker betrayed by his young friend, addressed as the sun.
- 1–2 Cf. Tilley, S968: 'Although the sun shines, leave not your cloak at home.'
- 2 travail as in Q. Both travail = labour, perhaps painfully, and travel = make a journey, are implied, the spellings being indistinguishable in Elizabethan orthography.
- 3 base clouds suggests unworthy companions, like the 'base contagious clouds' surrounding Prince Hal in Eastcheap, IH4 1.2.193
- 4 brav'ry splendour, courage, ostentatious beauty rotten smoke Clouds were thought of as vapours carrying infections, such as plague.
- 8 heals . . . disgrace Cf. Tilley, W929: 'Though the wound be healed yet the scar remains', alluded to also in Luc 731. The use of disgrace in an identical position in 33 and 34 draws attention to the close linking of the two. Here, as in 33, the word implies both 'shame' and 'disfigurement, loss of grace (beauty)' – a visible scar.
- 9 grief pain which may be perceived as in part physical; cf. Falstaff's question whether honour can 'take away the grief of a wound', IH4 5.1.132.
- 12 loss Capell's emendation to 'cross' has been accepted by virtually all subsequent editors; however, it transforms the speaker into a Christ-figure, a metaphor not used elsewhere in Son, and a Christ-figure who will not, contrary to Gospel accounts, forgive those who have crucified him. 42.12 uses the word in the same position, but in a context that suggests an identification with Simon of Cyrene, rather than with Christ himself. Though some of the religious connotations of repentance and forgiveness are invoked in 13–14, it is not clear that these are to be made fully explicit in the preceding line; Shakespeare may have been guilty of a non-rhyme. Booth (189) acknowledges that 'the repetition might be purposeful', illustrating the persistence of loss.
- 13 pearl adjectival, = made of pearl: suggestive of Christ's comparison of the kingdom of heaven to a pearl of great price, Matthew, 13.46 sheds Q's 'sheeds' made at least an eye-rhyme.

34

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travail forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy brav'ry in their rotten smoke?
'Tis not enough that through the cloud thou break, 5
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak
That heals the wound and cures not the disgrace;
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss; 10
Th'offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's loss.
 Ah, but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
 And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

2 travail] trauaile Q; travel Malone 12 loss] losse Q; cross Capell 13 sheds] sheeds

- 35 The young man has wronged his friend; in making excuses for him the poet colludes with him and shares his fault. From proverbial citations in the octave the poet moves to legal terminology in the sestet.
- 1 grieved Cf. grief in 34.9.
- 2 Roses have thorns proverbial: 'No rose without a thorn' (Tilley, R182). silver fountains Moving water was often described as 'silver'; cf. R2 5.3.59; KJ 2.1.339.
- 3 stain hide or darken; dishonour: clouds were thought of as carrying pollution and disease, and eclipses as portending disaster.
- 4 loathsome . . . bud proverbial: 'The canker soonest eats the fairest rose' (Tilley, C56); and cf. 70.7. Canker = a caterpillar or canker-worm (OED 4); 'bud' has already been established in 1.11 as a metonym for the young man.
- 5 All . . . faults yet another proverb: 'Every man has his faults' (Tilley, M116).
- 6 Authorizing The second and fourth syllables are stressed. The word is used in a legal sense for 'sanctioning, justifying', with a further play on 'author' as 'composer or writer' (OED 3a): he justifies the fault by writing a poem about it.
with compare by means of the sententious comparisons in ll. 1-5.
- 7 In healing or forgiving the youth's offence, the poet morally compromises himself: cf. salve in 34.7.
- 8 Excusing . . . are Either, offering more excuse for your sins than they deserve; or, offering more than they, as small sins, require. The common emendation of Q's 'their . . . their' to 'thy . . . thy' has been rejected in favour of 'these . . . these' on the hypothesis that what the compositor saw was 'theis', which he misread as 'their' (RP).
- 9 to . . . sense In order to defend your fault, committed through the bodily senses, I invoke (common) sense, or reason: cf. OED bring in 18f, 'To introduce (into consideration, discussion)'.
10 Your (legal) opponent is also your (legal) defender.
- 11 'gainst . . . commence submit a legal (and just) complaint against myself
- 12 civil war internal war, war within the 'state of man' (JC 2.1.67); also a war conducted with civility, or courtesy, respect (OED civil 12)
in both within my love and within my hate, and between the two of them
- 13 accessory Shakespeare's normal pronunciation was accessory (cf. R3 1.2.192 and Luc 922 and 1658); here used in a partly-legal sense to suggest the poet's complicity in his friend's offence.
- 14 to his still-loved friend, who has cruelly, hurtfully (sourly) injured him. The phrase sweet thief recurs in a more favourable sense in 99.2. What it is that has been taken away from the poet may be his reputation (cf. disgrace, 33.8 and 34.8), or the enjoyment of his friend's company (36.8), or both. Though the ostensible theme of 33 and 34 is forgiveness, the sustained analysis of the process of forgiveness renews and keeps alive the young man's fault. Yet another proverb is suggested: 'Forgive and forget' (Tilley, F593), cited four times in Shakespeare's plays; but unlike the proverbs in ll. 1-5 it is negated.

35

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done;
 Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
 Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
 And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
 All men make faults, and even I, in this, 5
 Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
 Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
 Excusing these sins more than these sins are:
 For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense;
 Thy adverse party is thy advocate, 10
 And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
 Such civil war is in my love and hate
 That I an accessory needs must be
 To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

3 moon] Moone sun] Sunne 7 corrupting, salving] corrupting saluing Q; corrupt in salving
Capell 8 these . . . these] this edn.; their . . . their Q 10 advocate] Aduocate

- 36 Continues the theme of the speaker's participation in the youth's guilt, this time with emphasis on outward reputation rather than moral responsibility. The poet appears to act as a scapegoat or whipping boy, taking his friend's blots on himself and rejoicing, at a distance, in the young man's splendid reputation.
- 1 confess acknowledge, declare we . . . twain We must remain two separate beings, not united into 'one flesh', as husband and wife; also, we must remain at odds, in dispute. Cf. R3 3.5.241, 'Go, counsellor! Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain'; and OED twain 3a.
- 2 our undivided loves They are united in affection, but physically separate.
- 3 those blots those disgraces, presumably corresponding with the faults of 35.5
- 4 (If they continue to be severed from each other,) the speaker can carry the full burden of the young man's shame, or, possibly, their mutual shame.
- 5 respect consideration, motive: cf. Ham 3.1.68–9, 'there's the respect / That makes calamity of so long life'; there may also be a reference to the 'mutual respect' in which the friends hold each other.
- 6 separable spite a mortifying situation (cf. Ham 1.5.188, 'O cursed spite') which causes separation
- 7 love's sole effect the tendency of love to make the two of us one, as in l. 1; and/or the unique condition or mode of fulfilment of our love
- 8 steal sweet hours An unexplained separable spite keeps us apart, diminishing the time spent together; it also detracts from the pleasures that are 'ours'.
- 9 I am not permitted to greet you openly at any future time (cf. Glossary, s.v. 'evermore').
- 10 bewailed guilt the shame that the poet has lamented and grieved for bewailed bewailed
- 13–14 Do not jeopardize your reputation by making a public display of favour towards me; I love you to such an extent that your good reputation is also mine: i.e. I do not want to see you shamed, even if I myself would be the beneficiary. The couplet is repeated in identical form at the end of 96, another sonnet on the public reception of the young man's 'faults'.

36

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one;
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect, 5
Though in our lives a separable spite;
Which, though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame, 10
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

6 spite] spight 9 evermore] euer-more

- 37 Extending the notion that he partakes vicariously of the young man's good parts, the poet finds consolation, perhaps delusory, for his own unlucky and inferior status in his young friend's talents and good fortune.
- 1 As . . . father The poet adopts metaphorically the role he projected on to his friend in 2.13–14.
- 3 made lame Neither the poet's decrepitude nor his lameness should be taken literally; cf. KL (First Quarto) 4.6.225, where Edgar describes himself as 'A most poore man, made lame by Fortune's blows'. The burdens of age were traditionally seen in terms of damage to the feet, as in the proverb 'The black ox has trod on his feet' (OED ox; Tilley, O103). dearest spite injury to the dearest, most intimate, part of him: the phrase picks up separable spite from 36.6.
- 4 of from worth and truth Since 33–6 have dealt with the young man's betrayal of his friend, his sensual fault (35.9) and blots (36.3), the celebration here of his worth and truth must entail an appropriation of the young man's weaknesses so effective that he can now be regarded as faultless.
- 5–6 beauty . . . more Alliteration and quick-fire enumeration of categories produce a near-comic effect, as if the addressee is being mocked for his (supposed) superabundance of gifts, rather than praised for them.
- 7 Entitled in having a rightful claim to (OED 4); or named after thy parts thy emended from Q's 'their'; cf. 26.12 and n. The young man's parts, or beauties and talents, have been celebrated in 17.4 and 31.3.
do crowned sit The gifts of fortune and nature enumerated in l. 5 (may) reach their greatest glory when located in you.
crowned crowned
- 8 I fasten my love closely to this abundance of blessings; cf. store in 11.9 and 14.12. There may be an implication both that the speaker is almost parasitically attaching himself to the youth's plentiful good fortune, and that, in loving him so devotedly, he is adding one further blessing.
- 9 despised Cf. 29.9.
- 10 this . . . give a reversal of the usual relationship between 'substance' and 'shadow': the speaker's imaginative, delusory enjoyment of his friend's good fortune provides him with solid satisfaction.
- 11 sufficed fully satisfied or nourished: cf. AYL 2.7.131.
- 12 all thy glory all your splendour, with a recollection of the image of 'crowning' in l. 7, as in Fr. gloire = halo or crown of light
- 13 Look what whatever
- 14 either a conditional: 'If I have this wish, it will give me tenfold happiness', with happy operating as a verb = make happy, as in 6.6; or an absolute statement: 'This wish is fulfilled; consequently I enjoy tenfold happiness'. Either way, the reader cannot escape a suspicion that what the speaker enjoys is 'the happiness of being well deceived'. The childish phrase happy me also suggests that, whether or not physically lame, he is at this point assuming the role of a 'lame' poet.

37

As a decrepit father takes delight
 To see his active child do deeds of youth,
 So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
 Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth:
 For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit, 5
 Or any of these all, or all, or more,
 Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
 I make my love engrafted to this store:
 So then I am not lame, poor, nor despised,
 Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give 10
 That I in thy abundance am sufficed,
 And by a part of all thy glory live:
 Look what is best, that best I wish in thee;
 This wish I have, then ten times happy me.

3 fortune's] Fortunes 7 Entitled] Intitled thy] Capell; their Q, Benson 8 engrafted] ingrafted
 9 despised] dispis'd 11 sufficed] suffic'd

- 38 Using a well-worn conceit, the speaker attributes his poetic skill – if any – to the inspiring nature of his subject-matter: cf. Sidney, AS, 3.
- 1 want . . . invent lack material for poetic invention
- 2 While . . . breathe while you live; with some echo of the divine 'breath' that created man (Genesis, 2.7)
- 3 Thine . . . argument the delightful subject-matter which is yourself (cf. OED argument 7 fig.)
- 4 rehearse narrate, describe
- 5 ought anything; or nothing, as in an 'ought', the figure 0, preparing for the multiplication-game of ll. 9–10
- 6 stand . . . sight meets your eye; but also 'rises up in competition with the sight of you', since a poetic image of the youth may, as in 18, transmit his beauty
- 7 to thee about you; addressing you
- 8 dost . . . light bring the light of inspiration to poetic creativity
- 9 the tenth Muse Since the nine Muses of classical mythology were all female, the conceit may, like 20.1 and 41.5–6, point to something quasi-feminine about the (male) addressee.
- 10 rhymers suggests inferior poets, mere versifiers (OED; and cf. 'scald rhymers', AC 5.2.214); yet the 'rhymers' who have called upon the nine Muses include the majority of Greek, Latin and early Renaissance poets.
- invocate This more elaborate form of the word 'invoke' suggests the redundant activity of the rhymers.
- 11 he . . . thee whoever invokes you: presumably above all, the present speaker
- 12 Eternal numbers everlasting verses, with a suggestion also of the generation of huge figures by the youth's application of the power of ten to previous sources of inspiration; for Eternal, cf. 18.12, and for numbers, 17.6.
- to . . . date to live beyond even a very distant limit in time
- 13 slight slender, insignificant: the word picks up sight and light in ll. 6 and 8. Muse the products of my pen: Muse here has a different application both from l. 7, where it denotes 'the source of my poetic creativity', and l. 9, where it refers to the young man. There is some awkwardness in the transition from the swaggering claim made for the superabundant worth of the Muse of l. 9 to the humbly diminished Muse of l. 13.
- these curious days these days of exacting or fastidious readers of poetry
- 14 Let the labour (of writing) be mine, while the credit for the achievement is yours.

38

How can my Muse want subject to invent
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O give thyself the thanks, if aught in me 5
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight:
For who's so dumb, that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in worth 10
Than those old nine which rhymers invoke;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
 If my slight Muse do please these curious days,
 The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

2 pour'st| poor'st 3 too] to 5 aught] ought 12 outlive] out-live

- 39 Resuming, from sonnets 35–7, the idea of his loving amalgamation with his young friend, the poet proposes a separation which will enable him to praise his friend better while contemplating his merits in absence.
- 1 'How can I celebrate your merits in a becoming fashion?': for manners = 'good manners, custom' (OED 4d), cf. IHA 3.1.184, 'Defect of manners, want of government'.
- 2 the . . . me Sidney used the expression 'my better half' in the context of devoted marriage (NA, 378), and the phrase quickly gained currency (Tilley, H49).
- 3 If our two selves are amalgamated, praising you achieves nothing, for it is merely self-praise.
- 4 mine own my own praise, praise of myself
- 5 Even for this for this precise reason
- 8 That . . . thee that recompense which is given to you
- which . . . alone You alone deserve it; and you deserve to receive it independently, not with your identity merged in mine.
- 11 entertain the time while away the time; cf. 'The weary time she cannot entertain', Luc 1361.
- 12 The addressee is still absent: 'you, absence, who give such pleasurable distractions to solitary time and meditation'. The popular emendation of dost to 'doth', though adopted by Booth, seems unnecessary, and breaks the consistency of the address to absence throughout the sestet. To 'deceive the time' was a regular expression, analogous to 'entertain the time'. There is a repetitive feeling to the sestet which suggests restless loneliness.
- 14 by praising my friend in the place where I am (and in this poem), though he continues to be somewhere else

39

O how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring,
And what is't but mine own, when I praise thee?
Even for this, let us divided live, 5
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee which thou deserv'st alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave 10
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts so sweetly dost deceive,
And that thou teachest how to make one twain
By praising him here who doth hence remain.

6 lose] loose 7 give] give: 12 dost] do Capell; doth Malone, Booth

- 40 The speaker loves the young man so much that however much advantage the youth takes of his affection he can do him no wrong; or any wrong he does will be forgiven. Sonnets 41 and 42 enlarge the narrative implication: the youth has betrayed his friend by taking one of the poet's loves, i.e. love-objects. The same, or an analogous, situation is referred to in 133–4 and 144.
- 1 Take . . . take with possible connotations of 'take carnal possession of' (Partridge, 200) my . . . love By addressing the youth as my love in the preceding phrase, the speaker hints that his own loves may be not merely 'varieties and abundance of affection', but 'love-objects, individuals whom I love'.
- 3 The additional love that the youth has appropriated cannot be called (or addressed as) true love partly because the speaker's true love was all his already; but also, perhaps, because in taking this more (l. 4) the youth is acting falsely, and/or causing another to act falsely.
- 4 this more It is tempting to find a pun on 'Moor' (note also l. 2), and detect here an anticipation of the sonnet alluding to 'a woman coloured ill' (144); but nothing else in this part of the sequence supports such a reference.
- 5–8 receivest . . . refuseth Feminine rhymes here suggest a breach of customary boundaries.
- 5 for my love in return for my love; in place of my love
- 6 for . . . usest The word 'use' has been established as having sexual connotations; cf. 4.13–14 and n. The senses here seem to be (a) because you exploit or take advantage of my affection; (b) for having sexual relations with one whom I love.
- 7 be blamed suggests that the youth is objectively blameworthy, although the speaker is determined, for his part, not to blame him
 thysself emended from Q's 'this selfe', which appears to reflect the
- compositors' tendency to make 'this'/'their'/'thy' errors.
- 8 wilful . . . refuseth seems to refer back to 1–17: the youth is capriciously engaging in sexual activity that, in the context of marriage, he refuses; wilful also suggests 'self-willed, headstrong', and 'driven by sexual desire (will)'. 'Taste' as a verb was often used by Shakespeare to denote sexual enjoyment (of a woman): cf. Oth 3.3.345–7; and Partridge, Bawdy, 201–2. It seems likely that the noun here suggests 'sexual consumption'. Booth proposes an alternative, opposite sense of what thysself refuseth as 'what you decline to give or grant', which, if pursued, could deepen the sonnet's bisexual undercurrents, leading us to the reading: 'you refuse to have sex with your devoted (male) lover, but wilfully have it with a woman (his mistress)'.
- 10 thou . . . poverty You take for yourself all that I have, which is very little, and/or worthless. The word 'steal' had associations with secret or illicit sexual activity, as in Edmund's reference to his being begotten 'in the lusty stealth of nature', KL 1.2.11.
- 11 love knows After seven uses of the word love with personal associations, love is here invoked as an abstract ideal, the effect being equivalent to 'heaven knows'.
grief sorrow; wound, injury; cf. 34. 9 and n.
- 12 to endure injuries inflicted out of love rather than out of hate, which are open or expected (known); the word bear recalls 34.12.
- 13 Lascivious grace you, who are graceful even when lustful. If the addressee is a nobleman, there may also be an allusion in grace to his high rank, as well as to his ability to confer grace or beneficence on others. The phrase strongly connects the youth with the seducer in LC, especially ll. 316–17: 'with the garment of a grace / The naked and concealed fiend he covered'.

40

Take all my loves, my love; yea, take them all;
 What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
 No love, my love, that thou mayst true love call;
 All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more:
 Then if for my love thou my love receivest, 5
 I cannot blame thee, for my love thou usest;
 But yet be blamed, if thou thyself deceivest
 By wilful taste of what thyself refuseth.
 I do forgive thy robb'ry, gentle thief,
 Although thou steal thee all my poverty; 10
 And yet love knows it is a greater grief
 To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
 Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
 Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

all . . . shows all vices, when committed by you, come over as virtues. Booth explores the complex implications of a pun on 'well'/'will'/'Will'.

14 'Even if you kill me with injuries (cf. Glossary, spite), let us not become enemies.'

2, 12 than] then 7 blamed] blam'd thyself] Malone; this selfe Q, Benson, Oxf

- 41 The speaker claims that his young friend's amorous proclivity is excusable because of his youth and attractiveness to women, but remonstrates with him for the double betrayal of engaging in sexual relations with his own mistress.
- 1 pretty childish, charming that liberty commits that you commit while at large: liberty has associations with sexual licence, as in MM 1.2.129.
- 2 sometime at some time; for some while
- 3 befits The singular verb following a plural subject (wrongs) is not uncommon in Elizabethan usage.
- 5 combines the praise in 20 of the youth as possessing 'A woman's gentle heart' with the proverbial claim that 'All women may be won' (Tilley, W681), which Shakespeare invoked in IH6 5.3.78–9: 'She's beautiful, and therefore to be wooed; / She is a woman, therefore to be won'; cf. also Tit 2.1.82; R3 1.2.228.
- 6 assailed vigorously wooed ; cf. AW 1.1.126; TN 1.3.60; Cym 1.4.136.
- 7–8 Though this sounds like an obvious truism, Shakespeare's first published work, VA, described a 'woman's son', Adonis, who refuses the advances of the goddess of love: Shakespeare may have expected readers to remember this still-popular poem, reprinted seven times by 1602.
- 8 sourly ungraciously, ill-naturedly prevailed For the sexual application of 'prevail', cf. 2H6 5.4.78.
- 9 seat the area designated for my sexual activity; cf. Oth 2.1.290–1, 'I do suspect the lustful Moor / Hath leap'd into my seat'.
forbear spare, refrain from
- 10 chide scold; banish
- 11 riot debauchery, wantonness: Shakespeare often associates the youthful Prince Hal with riot (IH4 1.1.85; 2H4 4.4.62, 5.5.66; H5 1.1.56); and cf. the proverb 'Youth riotously led breeds a loathsome old age' (Tilley, Y47).
- 12 truth converges in meaning with 'troth', a binding promise of fidelity; cf. BCP, Solemnization of Matrimony, 'I plight thee my troth'.
- 10–14 The threefold repetition of thy beauty, especially in l. 13, where we might expect some allusion to the woman's beauty, gives the reprimand in the sestet an effect of exoneration and compliment. The young man is not really responsible for his sexual transgressions, for it is a case of 'Why was he born so beautiful?'
- 13 Hers her truth or 'troth', or pledge of constancy to the poet.
- 14 Thine the youth's bond of friendship with the poet

41

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well befits;
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won; 5
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman woos, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till he have prevailed?
Ay me, but yet thou mightst my seat forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth 10
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forced to break a twofold truth:
Hers by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine by thy beauty being false to me.

2 sometime] some-time 12 twofold] two-fold

- 42 The poet grieves more for the loss of his young friend than for that of his mistress, but tries to persuade himself that the common ground between the young lovers is himself, and that, in loving the youth, the woman is manifesting her love for the poet with whom the youth, too, is united in love. An exercise in self-consolation, 42 explores what may be said (cf. l. 2) in the manner of Sidney's Astrophil's attempts 'to make myself believe that all is well' (AS, 2.13).
- 1-3 hast . . . hath with some of the connotations of 'have' as 'to possess carnally' (Partridge, 126)
- 1 grief sorrow; wound or injury: cf. 34.9 and n.
- 2 dearly fondly; but also with a sense of this affection as costly
- 3 is . . . chief is the loss I most lament; is the primary reason why I mourn or 'wail'
- 4 touches . . . nearly provokes emotion of a more intimate kind; has a more immediate bearing on me
- 5-8 Note the feminine rhymes excuse ye . . . love her . . . abuse me . . . approve her, which may draw attention to the unmanageable complexity of the situation; cf. 40.5-8.
- 5 Loving offenders Although he appears to address both lovers at this point, subsequent lines make it clear that the youth alone is the poet's true concern, the woman being referred to in the third person in ll. 6, 7, 8 and 10.
- excuse ye find an excuse for you
- 7 even so in the same manner
- abuse ill-treat, deceive, with some connotations of 'make a cuckold of' (Partridge, Bawdy, 63)
- 8 approve pronounce to be good, to commend (OED 6); to test or experience sexually
- 9-11 lose . . . losing . . . lose Q's 'loose . . . loosing . . . loose' permits additional senses: 'set you loose . . . setting her loose (as a "loose" woman) . . . set you two free'; in Elizabethan orthography 'lose' and 'loose' were not distinguished. However, images of 'gain' and 'loss' suggest that the primary image is of 'losing' rather than 'loosing', and the spelling has been adjusted accordingly. For a further possibly relevant application of 'loose', as 'experience sexual release', cf. Sidney, AS, 18.14.
- 12 lay . . . cross subject me to this trial or vexation (cf. OED cross 10a and b), with inescapable recollections of Simon of Cyrene being made to carry Christ's cross. If Capell's emendation is accepted at 34.12, the word occurs there in the same position and the same relationship with 'loss'.
- 13 my . . . one In previous sonnets (e.g. 36-7) it is claimed that the speaker and his friend are, in the manner of husband and wife, 'one flesh'; but a reader who recalls Hamlet's mocking application of similar chop-logic (Ham 4.3.52-6) may be unpersuaded by its elaboration here.
- 14 Sweet flattery gratifying expression of affection, or consoling delusion
- she . . . alone The claim that the woman, in loving the youth, actually loves only the poet, is both logically and emotionally weak. First, the argument that love for one person is really love for another is inherently implausible (cf. Sidney's use of it in AS, 91.12-14); and secondly, the poet has made it quite clear in preceding lines of the sonnet that what he cares about is the young man's defection, not the woman's.

42

That thou hast her it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I loved her dearly;
That she hath thee is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye: 5
Thou dost love her, because thou knowst I love her,
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suff'ring my friend for my sake to approve her;
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain, 10
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
 But here's the joy, my friend and I are one;
 Sweet flattery! Then she loves but me alone.

- 43 In the first of three sonnets on absence, the poet uses a series of polyptotic paradoxes and oxymora to contrast his night-time visions of his friend with his daytime absence.
- 1 wink close my eyes
- 2 unrespected unvalued, lacking interest: cf. Glossary, respect, sense 4; also unlooked at, unseen: cf. OED respect 5b. The word is used again, with slightly different import, at 54.10.
- 4 darkly . . . directed Eyes were thought of as emitting light, as well as receiving it: cf. 24.11 and n. An approximate sense may be: '(My eyes,) illuminated by the darkness (secrecy) of night, are guided by or towards light through darkness.'
- 5 whose . . . bright 'whose imagined semblance illuminates the dark shade of night': for shadow here cf. OED 6a, 'An unreal appearance; a delusive semblance or image'; and 6b, 'an actor or a play'. Shakespeare often used the word in the latter sense, as in Macbeth's 'Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player'; cf. also MND 5.1.430; R2 4.1.292; Cym 5.4.97.
- 6 'How would the substance behind your imagined image (shadow's form) create a joyful spectacle'.
- 8 shade 'unsubstantial image of something real' (Glossary); more or less synonymous with shadow in l. 5, and extending the paradox by which something apparently dark (a shade) emits light (shines)
- 9 blessed blessed: the word was associated with healing as well as with happiness (OED 4b), so includes the suggestion that the sight of the youth would cure the poet's blindness
- 11 dead night dead of night; night-time, which is associated with death and lifeless phantoms
- thy . . . shade The image of the youth is incomplete (imperfect) because it is an appearance only, not a physical actuality; but a recollection of the allusions to the young man's moral defects in 33–5 permits a subsidiary oxymoron: 'the image of you, beautiful despite your moral imperfection'.
- 13 to see 'in visible aspect' (OED 16a)
- 14 do . . . me display you to me: possibly the need for a rhyme prompted the word order, which has the odd effect of leaving the final stress on me rather than thee

43

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see;
For all the day they view things unrespected,
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And darkly bright, are bright in dark directed.
Then thou whose shadow shadows doth make bright, 5
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so?
How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day, 10
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
All days are nights to see till I see thee,
And nights bright days when dreams do show thee me.

8 unseeing] vn-seeing 11 thy] Capell; their Q

- 44 This sonnet continues the theme of absence: the speaker wishes that his body could move with the same agility as his thoughts, instead of being confined to the elements of earth and water.
- 1 dull slow, inert, inactive (Glossary, 3); and cf. 51.2, where it is applied to a dilatory horse
- 2 Injurious malicious in wrongdoing: Shakespeare applied the epithet to the operation of time, rather than space, in Luc 930 and Son 63.2.
stop my way impede my progress
- 3 space the distance or space that separates him from his friend
- 4 limits territories or regions defined by boundaries (OED 3a); and cf. 1H4 3.1.75, 'The Archdeacon hath divided it / Into three limits very equally.'
where to where, whither stay sojourn; remain
- 5 my foot common synecdoche for the whole body; cf. R2 1.1.63–6.
- 6 the . . . thee the region of the world furthest away (removed = separated, remote) from where you are; alternatively, removed may govern foot, yielding 'where I am removed from you in the furthest region of the world'.
- 7 jump 'to pass clear over by a leap' (OED 6a, with this example); cf. also Mac 1.7.7.
- 8 think think about, think of (OED 2a)
he The primary subject is thought: 'thought can travel as swiftly as it conceives of a desired place' (and cf. Tilley, T240). But there may be an underlying sense of thinking about where the young man may be.
- 9 thought kills . . . thought a self-infolded paradox: 'the thought that I am not thought (but lodged in heavy flesh) destroys me'.
- 11 'except that, since I am so exclusively fashioned of the (dull) elements of earth and water'
- 12 I . . . leisure Ingram and Redpath connect this with 'a petitioner waiting on a great man, Time'; there is probably also a sense of waiting for the young man's leisure time, as in 57.1–6.
- 13 naughts Q's 'naughts' has hitherto been emended to 'naught', on the ground that 'naughts' = 'A thing of no worth or value' (OED 3a) is rare, and not used by Shakespeare elsewhere. Partly on the difficilior lectio principle it has been retained here; also because Q's reading permits an extension of the image of the preceding line: instead of receiving hoped-for riches from the great lord Time, the earth-bound petitioner receives only round and leaden tears, which are like empty naughts in a ledger.
- 14 But no more than, merely heavy . . . woe Heaviness is the attribute of earth, and tears belong to water: the speaker's woe ensues from his imprisonment in these two elements; however, as Booth (206) observes, either's woe also suggests 'your woe and mine'. The final woe resonates as 'O', reinforcing naughts in the previous line.

- 45 This follows on immediately from the preceding sonnet's focus on the speaker's confinement in the elements of earth and water. The remaining, mobile, elements of air and fire have been dispatched from the poet to his friend, leaving him depressed and heavy.
- 1 The other two the other two elements in the human body: in the absence of his friend, it was established in 44.11, the speaker is composed only of 'earth and water'. slight insubstantial, weightless (OED 3a and b) purging Fire was associated with the purifying of metals, such as gold; symbolically, purifying fire was linked with the Second Coming and Last Judgement; cf. 'he is like a refiner's fire', Malachi, 3.3.
- 3 The . . . other Thought, the first, is airy; desire, the second, fiery.
desire Though desire is most frequently identified with sexual appetite, as in Sidney's AS and Shakespeare's VA 36, 386, 389, 547 and passim, its identification here with purging fire suggests, rather, an elevated form of affection which seeks to improve its object.
- 4 present absent absent from the poet; present with his friend; simultaneously present with the poet and absent from him: cf. Sidney, AS, 106.1, 'O absent presence!'
- 5 quicker speedier; fuller of life
- 6 tender loving; with some sense of the fragility and volatility of this loving message
- 7 My . . . four refers to the commonplace belief that the human body was composed of the four elements of fire, air, water and earth; cf. Marlowe, Tamburlaine, 2.7.18, and TN 2.3.9–10. Ill health was thought to result from an imbalance between them.
- 8 oppressed with melancholy cast down, dejected. 'Melancholy' was not merely a state of transient misery, but a severe medical condition caused by 'black humour'. The extra-metrical syllable in melancholy reinforces the sense of congestion.
- 9 life's composition the balance of humours or elements recured from Lat. recurare, to cure: there may or may not be a sense of restoring a previous state of health.
- 10 those swift messengers If these are equivalent to the poet's dispatch of thought and desire, they denote the friend's reciprocal sentiments, which may have been sent in a similarly insubstantial manner; however, the next two lines may allude to a message with some concrete actuality, such as a letter. It may be relevant to the plural messengers that in Elizabethan usage the plural 'letters' applied even to a single missive.
- 12 thy another 'their'/'thy' emendation: cf. 26.12 and n.
fair health good health; continued beauty: fair, amalgamating fire and air, suggests the young man's appropriation of these elements.
- 13 I joy I rejoice.
but . . . glad Sidney's AS, 92, offers an analogue to this account of the lover unsatisfied by news of his beloved's well-being.
- 14 them the messengers, air and fire (= thought and desire): the suggestion may be that the poet instantly responds to the friend's literal or metaphorical greetings, rather than that he returns them in identical form.
sad The subsidiary sense, 'heavy' (OED 7a and b), continues the image of the poet oppressed by his watery and earthy condition.

45

The other two, slight air, and purging fire,
 Are both with thee, wherever I abide:
 The first my thought, the other my desire,
 These, present absent, with swift motion slide;
 For when these quicker elements are gone 5
 In tender embassy of love to thee,
 My life being made of four, with two alone
 Sinks down to death, oppressed with melancholy,
 Until life's composition be recured
 By those swift messengers returned from thee 10
 Who even but now come back again assured
 Of thy fair health, recounting it to me.
 This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
 I send them back again and straight grow sad.

2 wherever] where euer 5 elements] Elements 6 embassy] Embassie 9 life's] Malone; liues Q, Benson 10 returned] return'd 12 thy] Malone; their Q

- 46 This sonnet and the following pursue a rhetorical debate between the speaker's eye, which can apprehend the youth physically, and his heart, which comprehends him imaginatively. The conceit was a traditional one; the sustained metaphor is that of a legal disputation.
- 1 mortal primarily suggests a fight to the death (OED 3); but there may be a secondary, subversive, suggestion that the conflict is itself mortal in the sense of being transient (OED 2), as in Ham 3.1.67.
- 2 divide the conquest distribute the spoils of war; share out the benefits of having seen the youth
- thy sight the sight of you, or of an image of you
- 3 My eye wishes to deny my heart the sight of your image.
- 3, *13, 148 thy See 26.12n.
- 6 'Closet' could denote a small cabinet in which valuables were stored (OED 3a); but 'the closet of the heart' had a specific anatomical reference to the pericardium or area surrounding the heart (OED 6a). The transparency of eyes, which are crystal (cf. HS 2.3.54; VA 963), is implicitly contrasted with the opacity of the enclosed heart.
- 7 the defendant The heart prosecutes; the eye defends.
- deny another term with legal connotations
- 9 To 'cide Most modern editors accept George Sewell's (Rollins, 1.127-9) and Malone's interpretation of Q's 'side' as '(de)cide', which given the indifference of the copy-text writer or the compositors to 's'/'c' distinctions is plausible, yielding the sense 'determine or resolve'. Ingram and Redpath retain 'side', glossing it as a verb = 'to take the part of' or 'to clear or tidy up'; however, their supporting examples are not closely analogous. Another possible, but on balance less cogent, emendation would be 'cite', = 'testify to, be evidence of', as in AW 1.2.216; in this case the error might result from compositorial mishearing.
- title claim, entitlement
- empanelled empanellèd: = compelled to appear in a court
- 10 quest jury
- 11 determined determinèd: = resolved, adjudged
- 12 clear eyes' moiety the portion that belongs to the clear eyes – cf. crystal eyes in l. 6; the portion that clearly belongs to the eyes
- dear heart's part the portion belonging to the heart, the intimate seat of feeling; the precious portion belonging to the heart: just as clear may govern either eyes or moiety, so dear may apply to either eyes or part. The internal rhyme in heart's part gives additional emphasis to the chiasmic repetition, in the rhymes at 10, 12, 13, 14, of heart . . . part . . . part . . . heart.
- 13 mine eyes' due what is owed, as recompense, to the eyes; cf. the world's due, 1.14 and n.
- 14 my heart's right what belongs to my heart as of right
- thy . . . heart suggests both 'my love of you, retained within my heart'; and, with a quick shift of emphasis, 'your heartfelt love of me'

46

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war
 How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
 Mine eye, my heart thy picture's sight would bar;
 My heart, mine eye the freedom of that right;
 My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie, 5
 A closet never pierced with crystal eyes;
 But the defendant doth that plea deny,
 And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
 To 'cide this title is empanelled
 A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart, 10
 And by their verdict is determined
 The clear eyes' moiety, and the dear heart's part:
 As thus, mine eyes' due is thy outward part,
 And my heart's right, thy inward love of heart.

3, 8, 13, 14 thy] Capell; their Q 6 A . . . eyes;] (A . . . eyes) 9 'cide] Malone; side Q

- 47 In 46 eye and heart were in conflict; here they are in harmony, each consoling the other with thoughts or images of the young man.
- 1 a . . . took an agreement is made: in Elizabethan usage 'took' was an acceptable past participle (cf. Abbott, and MM 2.2.74).
- 2 good turns Cf. the similar use of the phrase in 24.9
- 3 famished . . . look for the notion of the eyes of an absent lover as 'famished', cf. Sidney, AS, 106.6
- 4 with sighs may be the object either of in love or of smother: the heart loves empty sighs, and consequently smothers itself; or, the loving heart smothers itself with sighing.
- 5 my love's picture appears to refer to a concrete depiction, not just a mental image
- 6 bids invites: the metaphor of the loving banquet recalls Spenser's Amoretti (1595), 77 (Shorter Poems, 646–7).
- 11 *no The MS may have read 'noe', rendered by the compositor as 'nor'.
- 12 them . . . they The subject is still my thoughts.
- 14 eye's kept in the singular, to conform with eye in ll. 1, 3, 5, 7, though Q's 'eyes' would permit 'eyes'

47

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other;
When that mine eye is famished for a look,
Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
With my love's picture then my eye doth feast, 5
And to the painted banquet bids my heart;
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part.
So either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away, art present still with me: 10
For thou no further than my thoughts canst move,
And I am still with them, and they with thee;
Or if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

10 art] Capell; are Q 11 no] Capell; nor Q; not Benson, IR

- 48 From meditations on the enclosure of his young friend's image within his heart, the speaker moves to a contrast between the vulnerability of this most precious commodity and the security of his earthly possessions.
- 1 took my way set out on my journey
- 2 truest bars most reliable locks or barricades
- 3 unused unused: = not stolen or tampered with
- stay remain.
- 4 From away from, or safe from
- wards guard, protection; also a technical term for the inner structure of a lock (OED 24a; and cf. Luc 303)
- 5 to whom compared with whom; with an additional sense of 'in whose eyes'. To a wealthy young nobleman, the valuables of a professional playwright would no doubt seem trifling.
- 6 Most worthy comfort most valuable source of comfort or solace; with a possible play on worthy as 'distinguished, estimable' (OED 2a)
- grief sadness; wound, injury; cf. 34.9 and n.
- 7 best of dearest best among those I love most dearly, or of the possessions
- I most cherish
- care responsibility, source of anxiety
- 11 gentle closure loving containment
- my breast The then fairly new sense of 'chest' as 'thorax' was used by Shakespeare in TC 1.3.163 and 4.5.10; here there may be a reference to its figurative application, as 'seat of the emotions and passions' (OED 9a and b), yielding the suggestion that 'the only chest in which I have you is my own chest (breast)'.
- 12 elliptically expressed for 'into which you may come and from which you may go (depart) according to your own pleasure'
- 14 truth . . . dear alludes to the proverb 'The prey entices the thief' (Tilley, P570), which Shakespeare adapted in VA 724, 'Rich preys make true men thieves'. Moving on from the allusion to every vulgar thief in l. 8, the poet concludes by suggesting that even a normally honourable person might break vows when confronted by the irresistible attractions of the young man, who is both dear = precious, and dear = loved, lovable.

48

How careful was I, when I took my way,
Each trifle under trueſt bars to thruſt,
That to my uſe it might unuſed ſtay
From hands of falſhood, in ſure wards of truſt;
But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are, 5
Moſt worthy comfort, now my greateſt grief,
Thou beſt of deareſt, and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
Thee have I not locked up in any cheſt,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art, 10
Within the gentle cloſure of my breaſt,
From whence at pleaſure thou mayſt come and part;
And even thence thou wilt be ſtol'n, I fear;
For truth proves thieviſh for a prize ſo dear.

- 49 The speaker prepares himself for the prospect of a future time when the young man no longer cares for him by invoking the irrationality of love. Since neither his own love nor that of the young man can be justified, the future cessation of the youth's affection needs no justification, either. The imagined situation is strongly reminiscent of Henry V's rejection of Falstaff.
- 1 Against that time in expectation of that time: cf. MND 3.2.99.
- 2 defects failings, deficiencies
- 3 Whenas at a time when cast . . . sum made its final reckoning: cf. cast = 'To count or reckon so as to ascertain the sum of various numbers' (OED 37a, b, c.)
- 4 audit a formal examination of accounts: cf. 126.11.
advised respects sober considerations: cf. 'advised respect', KJ 4.2.214; there may also be a suggestion of the young man taking advice from a mature counsellor.
- 5 strangely pass walk by like a stranger, with an estranged or distant demeanour (cf. OED strange 11)
- 7 converted . . . was transformed from its former condition: cf. 2 H4 5.5.56, 'Presume not that I am the thing I was'; also 5.2.60-1, 'Harry lives, that shall convert those tears / By number into hours of happiness'.
- 8 gravity the mature judgement associated with age: cf. 2*H4* 1.2.160.
- 9 ensconce me here establish myself firmly, as if in a 'sconce', or small fort
- 10 mine own desert Initially, it may appear that the speaker is consoling himself with the thought of his own merit; but the final couplet indicates that the implication is 'my own (lack of) merit'.
- 11 this my hand includes a reference to 'this my handwriting', i.e. the sonnet we are reading uprear raise, as if raising a hand to affirm testimony given in a lawcourt: the speaker incriminates himself; there is also some suggestion of raising his hand towards physical self-injury.
- 12 guard protect, justify on thy part on your side in a contest or legal dispute
- 13 thou . . . laws You are supported by legal right. The anticipated alliance between the youth and laws is analogous to Prince Hal's reconciliation with the Lord Chief Justice, 2*H4* 5.2.
- 14 why to love cuts two ways. The speaker declares a self-disarming inability to discover any reason why he should be loved, but also hints that he cannot justify his own love for the young man: 'Why should you love me – but, come to that, why should I love you?'

49

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects;
Whenas thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Called to that audit by advised respects;
Against that time when thou shalt strangely pass, 5
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye;
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity;
Against that time do I ensconce me here,
Within the knowledge of mine own desert, 10
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:
 To leave poor me, thou hast the strength of laws,
 Since why to love, I can allege no cause.

3 Whenas] When as 4 Called] Cauld advised] aduis'd

- 50 The speaker goes miserably on a journey which takes him away from the young man, and his slow horse seems to sympathize with his reluctance. The sonnet may allude ironically to Sidney, AS, 49, in which Astrophil rides his horse and is in turn ridden by love.
- 1 heavy partly adverbial, governing journey; partly adjectival, governing I; suggests both a physical and an emotional burden (cf. OED 27a)
- 2 my . . . end the object of my tedious journey, with a possible play on 'travail'
- 3 that . . . repose the leisure and rest that await him at his destination
- 5 tired . . . woe The conceit is that the horse is weary not because of the speaker's literal weight, but because of his sadness: though never used, the word 'sad', with its connotations of solidity and heaviness (cf. OED 7), is everywhere implied.
- 6 dully Q's 'duly' is so emended by editors from Benson onwards; dull bearer in l. 2 of the following sonnet seems to support the emendation. Though 'duly' is not nonsensical, the double 'bears . . . to bear' seems rather vacuous with Q's reading, whereas dully makes a distinction between the general function of the horse – 'The beast that bears me' – and his specific response to the additional burden of misery – 'that weight in me' – which makes his movement dull.
- 7 the wretch often used with a sense of mingled pity and affection: cf. the Nurse's reference to the infant Juliet as a 'pretty wretch' (RJ 1.3.44), or Gertrude's to Ophelia as 'the poor wretch' (Ham 4.7.183).
- 9 The bloody spur the spur that draws blood; with a suggestion that the spur is already bloody from previous attempts to make the animal move
- 10 sometimes every now and again
- anger By personifying anger, the speaker rhetorically disclaims responsibility for his cruelty to the horse, preparing for his empathetic response to the horse's suffering in 11–12.
- 11 heavily The repetition of the partly-adverbial heavy from l. 1 underlines the sympathy between horse and rider.
- 12 sharp painful, either physically (to the horse), or emotionally (to the speaker); cf. OED 5c.
- 14 The analogy between the horse's physical wound and the speaker's mental one is strengthened if the reader remembers that grief could refer to physical injury, as in IH4 1.5.132 and Son 33.9. What the horse's groan prompts the speaker to think is something he already knew at the beginning of the sonnet, thus enacting a process of weary repetition. Onward and behind refer to time as well as space: sorrow is in the future, joy in the past.

50

How heavy do I journey on the way
When what I seek, my weary travel's end,
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
'Thus far the miles are measured from thy friend.'
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe, 5
Plods dully on to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider loved not speed being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide, 10
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side,
For that same groan doth put this in my mind:
My grief lies onward and my joy behind.

4 measured] measurde 6 dully] Benson; dully Q 8 loved] lou'd 10 sometimes] some-times

- 51 This sonnet develops the theme of 50. The horse continues to move slowly as he takes the speaker away from his friend; but on the return journey the poet hopes to fly at the speed of love, outstripping or abandoning his slow-paced steed.
- 1 Thus in the manner to be expounded in l. 3
- 2 dull bearer his slow horse, which in 50.6 Plods dully on
- speed to go with speed (OED 13): ironic, since both the previous sonnet and this indicate that he travels slowly and reluctantly
- 4 posting travelling swiftly, like the bearers of important messages
- 5 then when it is time to return
- 6 swift extremity the greatest extreme of swiftness
- 7 spur probably metaphorical, = 'put on speed', in contrast to the physical application of spurs to the unhappy horse in 50.9
- 8 I will move with such speed (as if flying) that I shall seem not to move
- 10 perfect'st The build-up of consonants makes this an awkward reading; yet it is hard to account otherwise for the presence of 's' at the end of the word 'perfects' in Q, and in MA 2.1.317. Shakespeare wrote the almost unsayable line 'Silence is the perfectest herald of joy'. Love, as in 45, is composed of the elements of fire and air, in contrast to the earthy dullness of the horse.
- 11 neigh . . . flesh None of the many attempts to emend or improve this phrase offers a convincing alternative to the Q reading; for a detailed discussion, see Booth, 218–20. The Q reading can be glossed as 'not neigh in the manner of commonplace (horse) flesh': instead of uttering an equine non-verbal 'neigh', the poet's love will speak ll. 13–14. The Dauphin's extravagant praise of his horse in H5 3.7 has some analogies with this line, and includes the claim that 'his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch'.
- his fiery race his fiery trajectory (cf. OED race 5). The subject is still desire, which moves with the speed of fire, or of the sun travelling across the airy heavens. For this application of race, cf. the 'dazzling race', probably that of a lamp, in Sidney, AS, 105.6.
- 12 love . . . jade love (synonymous with desire in l. 10) out of affection will excuse my (low-grade) horse; there may also be a hint of 'love in recompense for love'.
- 13–14 The couplet is imagined as spoken by the poet's love.
- 13 wilful slow deliberately (wilfully) slow; or willing to move, but nevertheless slow
- 14 give . . . go allow the horse to travel at his own pace (in contrast to the speed of desire); or dispense with the horse's services altogether

- 52 Still trying to come to terms with separation from his friend, the poet compares absence with the physical and temporal constraints by means of which the preciousness of jewels and special holidays is sustained. The sonnet's number alludes to the number of weeks in a year.
- 1 So . . . rich I am like the rich (man). The image is broadly reminiscent of the opening scenes of Marlowe's Jew of Malta and Jonson's Volpone, in both of which the protagonist surveys his treasure; in neither of these, however, is it suggested that this is an infrequent activity.
blessèd blessèd
- 2 bring him to bring him to a sight of up-locked up-lockèd
- 4 for fear of dulling the keenness of pleasure, which is sustained by infrequency
- 5 rare special, choice; not often encountered: the idea is strongly analogous to Prince Hal's image, applied to his absence from court, in IH4 1.2.199–201: 'If all the year were playing holidays, / To sport would be as tedious as to work; / But when they seldom come, they wish'd for come, / And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.' Cf. also 3.2.55–9, in which Henry IV speaks of his careful control of his public appearances: 'and so my state / Seldom, but sumptuous, show'd like a feast, / And wan by rareness such solemnity'.
- 6 in . . . year arranged in the year which for long stretches lacks holidays
- 7 placed placèd
- 8 captain chief, principal carcanet 'an ornamental collar or necklace, usually of gold or set with jewels' (OED)
- 9 So . . . you in the same manner, the time that keeps you separate from me is
- 11 to 'make special' = indicate specially, specify; the sense is 'to mark out as especially fortunate some particular moment'
- 12 his imprisoned pride the splendour of the moment, previously hidden by the time of absence; the occluded magnificence of the youth
- 13 Blessèd blessèd: expanded from the word's previous occurrence in l. 11 as a single syllable
- 14 (Your merits ensure that) those who enjoy your presence experience a sense of triumph; those who are separated from you can at least enjoy the the pleasure of hoping for it.

52

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure;
Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare, 5
Since, seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide, 10
To make some special instant special blessed
By new unfolding his imprisoned pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph; being lacked, to hope.

3 every] eu'ry 8 jewels] lewells 10 wardrobe] ward-robe 12 imprisoned] imprison'd 14 lacked] lackt

- 53 The fair youth is claimed as the archetype or defining image of all beauty, whether human or natural, male or female; but according to the Platonic idea of externals as a shadow of inward realities, he is (apparently) praised above all for moral excellence.
- 1 substance used in the philosophical sense: cf. OED 3a, 'That which underlies phenomena; the permanent substratum of things'; cf. 5.14 for a similar application of the word.
- 2 millions . . . tend 'numberless images of other individuals accompany you': strange suggests both 'foreign' and 'belonging to another person or place, not one's own' (Glossary); shadows suggests various kinds of simulacra, such as ghosts, portraits or actors; and to tend may be to wait upon, take care of, or follow.
- 3 'since each one of the strange shadows has a single image or appearance'
- 4 The young man's plurality is contained in singleness. Though he is only one (cf. sonnets 1–17, especially 3 and 8, with their stress on his 'singleness'), he is able to impart or bestow something on all the others. Initially it seems that lend = 'lend an appearance of'; but ll. 5–6 define it as 'bestow fresh attributes upon'.
- 5–6 Presumably refers to Shakespeare's own VA, with its celebration of the irresistible though immature beauty of 'rose-cheeked Adonis': the implication is therefore not only that 'anyone who attempts to describe Adonis will produce something which resembles you, but falls far short', but also: 'look at my own poetic shadowing of Adonis, and you will find that it is an inadequate representation of yourself'. Southamptonites may find support in this second reading, since VA was dedicated to Southampton; however, the allusion would work equally well as a claim that Shakespeare's first published poem was an unconscious (as well as inadequate) foreshadowing of another fair youth, and/or patron.
- 7 "'Set out" (portray) Helen of Troy in such a way as to exemplify the highest ideal of beauty'; however, the act of imitating or counterfeiting seems to be partly transferred from artist to subject, with connotations of cosmetics and false beauty. Like Son, TC was printed in 1609, and ll. 7–8 may carry an allusion to Shakespeare's own published play, in which, however, Helen is rather unflatteringly portrayed.
- 8 Grecian tires Greek costume or attire, or, specifically, head-dress, continuing the suggestion that the imitable features of Helen of Troy are not her natural beauties but her artificial adornments. The idea of a young man adorned with a Greek woman's costume or head-dress seems a shade grotesque, but it is of course such an image that Elizabethan audiences would have seen either in Marlowe's Doctor Faustus or Shakespeare's TC 3.1.
- 9 Shakespeare's reference to his own writings here comes even closer to home, since sonnet 18 has deployed imagery of spring and summer, 12 of autumn and harvest; foison = abundance; by extension, abundant harvest, the season of harvest.
- 10 The one spring; despite the denial, in sonnet 18, that a summer's day could be an adequate metonym for the youth shadow appearance, representation, with an oxymoron in the notion of a shadow, supposedly dark, representing the freshness and clarity of spring and youthful beauty
- 11 bounty munificence, like the abundance of harvest; however, the suggestion may be rather of bountiful endowments than of largesse in distributing them.
- 12 may be read either as 'and you (are manifested) in every fair image we perceive'; or 'and we acknowledge (know) you in every fair image'
- blest blest
- 13 external grace grace, or beauty, of exterior form
- 14 primarily hyperbolic praise: (a) 'There is no resemblance between you and anyone else when it comes to the interior virtue of constancy', with some

53

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
 That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
 Since every one hath every one one shade,
 And you, but one, can every shadow lend;
 Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit 5
 Is poorly imitated after you;
 On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set
 And you in Grecian tires are painted new;
 Speak of the spring, and foison of the year:
 The one doth shadow of your beauty show, 10
 The other as your bounty doth appear,
 And you in every blessed shape we know.
 In all external grace you have some part,
 But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

reminiscence, prompted by the Helen simile of ll. 7–8, of 20, 3–4, in which the youth has a woman's facial beauty but lacks her emotional instability; however, if like is construed as a verb, a contrary sense (b) emerges, one which conforms better with 40–42: 'But you are attracted to (like) no one for the sake of his or her constant heart, nor is that the source of your own attractiveness'. Shakespeare often used 'like' (v.) for 'be sexually attracted to'; cf. CE 3.2.7, AC 3.3.13 and many other instances. In this reading But introduces a radical modification of all that has gone before, rather than an extension: (a) suggests 'your beauty is paramount, and so is your constancy'; (b) 'your external beauty is paramount, but does not match up to your inward qualities, since you are inconstant'. For an image analogous to (b), of excelling beauty which fails to correspond with moral worth, cf. TN 3.2.375–9. Booth (226) suggests that constant heart could have been readily heard as 'constant art', which would link the youth further with the seductive wiles of Helen in ll. 7–8.

- 54 This sonnet continues the theme of substance and show through a distinction between roses and canker blooms, the former alone being susceptible of distillation into rose-water; this process is analogous to the poet's artistic preservation of the young man's quintessential substance.
- 1 seem Though the assertion is that inward truth manifests itself as the crowning glory of external beauty, the word seem introduces at the outset a faint uncertainty about the friend's integrity. Also, if the previous sonnet's final line is read in sense (b) (see 53.14n.), ll. 1–2 express a longing for what is lacking, rather than a eulogy of what the youth embodies.
- 2 By on account of, reinforced by
- 3 deem judge
- 4 cf. 'As sweet as a rose' (Tilley, R178): roses were prized by the Elizabethans as much for their culinary and medicinal properties as for their appearance. The herbalist John Parkinson said that their virtues were so many that a whole book could be written about them (Theatrum Britannicum. The Theater of Plants (1640), 1021).
- 5 canker blooms Previous editors have identified these with 'an inferior kind of rose; the dog-rose' (OED 5), an interpretation which seems right for Shakespeare's uses of 'canker' as a plant in IH4 1.3.173–4 and MA 1.3.25–6. Here, however, it is possible that he refers, rather, to the colloquial name for wild red poppies, which was 'cankers' or 'canker rose'; cf. John Gerard, Herball (1636), index under 'canker rose'; Parkinson, op. cit., 367; and for a fuller discussion cf. Duncan-Jones, 'Canker blooms'.
- as deep a dye as intense a colour; roses were chosen for distillation which were deep red or crimson. While 'dog-roses' or wild roses could not be claimed as being as strongly coloured as crimson garden roses, wild poppies could.
- 6 perfumed tincture the fragrant essence and flavour of roses extracted by distillation; cf. OED tincture 5.
- perfumed perfumèd
- 7 Hang . . . thorns In IH4 1.3.175 the 'canker' seems synonymous with a 'thorn'; but the assertion here that their thorns are indistinguishable from those of true roses comes across as poetic exaggeration, whether canker blooms are identified with wild roses or with wild poppies. Possibly thorns is used here for 'stalks' or 'stems'; cf. LLL 4.3.110, part of a poem which occurs also in PP 238.
- 8 'when a summer breeze releases them from the buds which mask them'
- masked maskèd
- 9 'because their merit lies only in their appearance, without inward worth': virtue is used here in the technical sense of 'power, efficacy', especially applied to flowers and plants. Roses (see 1. 3n.) have many 'virtues'; dog-roses have the same 'virtues', but in much less powerful form; poppy flowers have none, and their petals were not used for distillation. Their seeds, however, induce sleep and forgetfulness, a property undesirable in the subject of the poet's verse.
- 10 unwooed not sought after; with a strong implication that what is really at issue is the attractiveness of shallow but ostentatious young people
- unrespected not looked at; not esteemed or treated with respect: cf. 43. 2 and n.
- 11 Die to themselves They die alone; they are as if dead; they are their own dye, furnishing no colour or value to others; and, possibly, they experience orgasm in solitude.
- Sweet roses suggests both 'roses which, unlike cankers, are sweet'; and 'roses which are sweet, as distinct from those which are not'. The second reading would be compatible with an identification of canker blooms with poppies, which were also called 'corn roses'; cf. Duncan-Jones, 'Canker blooms'.
- 12 sweet deaths Roses died sweetly, because they enjoyed a further life as rose-water, syrup or conserve; and the products of dead roses were literally

54

O how much more doth beauty beauteous seem
 By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
 The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
 For that sweet odour which doth in it live;
 The canker blooms have full as deep a dye 5
 As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
 Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly,
 When summer's breath their masked buds discloses;
 But for their virtue only is their show
 They live unwooded, and unrespected fade, 10
 Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
 Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made;
 And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth;
 When that shall vade, by verse distils your truth.

sweet, because the process of conservation required the addition of a large quantity of sugar.

- 13 And . . . you 'and the same principle applies to you'; or, 'and so the beauty which is yours'

youth primarily suggests 'you, my young friend'; but we may if we choose read the assertion as applying to the general condition of 'beauteous and lovely youth'. There may be a threatening distinction between the youth which is beauteous and lovely, which will enjoy a second life in poetry, and that which is empty and shallow (like poppy blooms?) and will be quickly forgotten.

- 14 that beauty, the announced subject of the sonnet; or youth, now interpreted as the condition of being young vade go away (cf. Lat. vadere), often used in a sense which overlaps with 'fade' (as in l. 10); cf. Sidney, AS, 102.5, 'How doth the colour vade of those vermilion dyes'.

by . . . truth 'by means of verse your truth is preserved and transmitted to future generations': whereas in sonnets 1 and 5 procreation was recommended as the means of preserving beauty's rose, that power is here attributed to poetry. The suggestion that ageing (and death?) must occur before poetic distillation is fully accomplished is effective if chilling: even as plucked roses are boiled with sugar, so (dead) human beauty is conserved with rhetoric. Capell's widely accepted emendation of by to 'my' narrows down the exploration of large principles that characterizes this sonnet.

- 55 Building on the end of the previous sonnet, the speaker claims that his powerful rhyme will outlast palaces and cities, keeping the youth's virtues alive until the Last Judgement. For an account of the classical resonances of this claim, see Leishman, 37 and passim.
- 1 monuments Q's 'monument' may be a compositorial error, with abbreviated '-es' read as a comma.
- 1-2 the . . . princes suggests gilded tombs of monarchs in marble chambers, such as that of Henry V in Westminster Abbey
- 3 these contents the contents of this book; these poems, which contain you; these poems, which are a source of lasting happiness or contentment
- 4 unswept stone The rhetorical dynamic of comparison is reversed: in ll. 1-2 the poet's rhyme outlives what is supposed to be lasting; in 4 it outshines what is, because of the eroding process of time, no longer shining, and has come to be neglected. The image evokes a ruined, deserted city, such as those described in Spenser's Ruines of Time (1595), 92-8 (Shorter Poems, 231-4).
besmeared . . . time Time is personified as a sluttish housewife who has allowed stone buildings to crumble and blacken.
- 5 wasteful war war which lays cities and monuments waste
- 7 The forward thrust of the sonnet obscures the awkwardness of making sword, as well as fire, the subject of burn. 'Sword and fire' was a familiar phrase; cf. OED fire, 5a; and IH4 2.4.312-13. The assonance between Mars and war's also helps to bond the two agents of destruction.
- 8 living record presumably, a record which transcends the fragile paper it is written on, which would fall victim to quick fire even sooner than would statues and stone buildings. The assertion can be read as support for Shakespeare's intention to publish Son, to ensure the proliferation of copies.
- 9 'Gainst in the face of, in opposition to all oblivious enmity enmity which desires that the youth is forgotten; or enmity which is itself unaware of your worth; or enmity which forgets everything, is oblivious to all
- 10 pace a surprisingly gentle word, where we might expect something more assertive, such as 'stride'; perhaps chosen both for its similarity to 'peace', in contrast to the images of warfare which precede it, and for its rhyme with the ensuing praise room space, a place in which the youth's merit is expounded, with a possible pun on 'Rome', suggesting the perpetuation, in the artistic image of the youth, of ancient splendour. Shakespeare used this pun in JC 1.2.156 and K7 3.1.180.
- 11-12 all . . . out 'all those succeeding generations through whom the world moves to its decay, when it is "worn out": cf. KL 4.6.136-7, Gloucester commenting on Lear's decay, 'This great world / Shall so wear out to naught'. Shakespeare, like Donne, played with the idea that nature, or at least mankind, was decaying and declining; cf. 'mankind decays so soon, / We are scarce our fathers' shadows cast at noon' (Donne, An Anatomy of the World, 143-4).
- 12 ending doom the (Last) judgement, with which the world will end
- 13 that when; cf. AYL 3.2.163.
- 14 this this powerful rhyme, referring presumably not just to sonnet 55 but to the sequence as a whole dwell . . . eyes Lovers will see you in this verse, and take you as a model; your image will be reflected in the eyes of lovers; you will dwell in the eyes of readers who will learn to love you by reading this verse. However, since lovers' eyes were notoriously unreliable, as in the proverb 'Love is blind' (Tilley, L506), the image introduces a subversive doubt.

- 56 Addressing the quality of love – whether his own, his friend's, or that of both is not clear – the poet pleads for it to be charged with fresh vigour and for a separation between the friends to function as a device to renew the intensity of their devotion. Because Sweet love is unlocated, the reader is left unsure whether the speaker has wearied of his friend or his friend of him.
- 2 than appetite than that of appetite: the word feeding in the following line suggests 'appetite for food'; but since the comparison is with love, sexual appetite is primarily implied, which is more common in Shakespeare than the application to food, as in VA 34, Luc 546; and cf. Partridge, Bawdy, 66, for more examples.
- 5 So . . . thou Despite the personal-seeming address, which invites the reader to identify the addressee as a human individual, the subject seems still to be 'the emotion of love'; whose, is not clear.
- 6 wink close; eyes, like two mouths, being so amply 'fed' with the sight of the beloved that they shut themselves against further cramming
- 8 dullness lethargy; bluntness, perhaps with a sense of sexual torpor; cf. Adonis' 'dull disdain', VA 33.
- 9 interim an intervening time, interval of time (OED 7); in Shakespeare most often suggesting a period of inactivity or absence: cf. Oth 1.3.258–9, in which Desdemona declares that 'I a heavy interim shall support / By his dear absence; let me go with him.' The following sonnet may imply that the sad interim experienced by the speakers is caused by the young man's withdrawal.
- 9–11 ocean . . . banks The image appears to be one of a wide river or estuary, rather than an 'ocean' in the normal sense, with a newly betrothed couple standing on opposite sides of the water and gazing across in the hope of a sight of each other. The notion of two lovers separated by a sound of water is irresistibly reminiscent of the Hero and Leander story (as in Marlowe's poem); but its tragic conclusion is presumably not invoked here. The application to the friends of the image of marriage (contracted new) shows how far the speaker has come from sonnets 1–5, in which the youth was contracted only to his own beauty, but urged to marry a woman.
- 11–12 when . . . love Presumably the betrothed lovers are imagined as gazing across the water daily, being eventually rewarded either with a sight of each other and/or with a fresh meeting.
- 13 Or Q's 'As', though defended by Sisson (1.212), cannot readily introduce the sense which seems to be required: 'here is another consoling analogy . . .'.
winter The association of winter with misery or absence is conventional; cf. Sidney, AS, 69.7; R3 1.1.1. It is picked up and developed in sonnet 97.
- 14 summer's welcome the eagerness with which we respond to summer; the welcome, or bountiful reception, that summer gives to us wished wished for rare choice, valuable; especially valuable because perceived as infrequent

56

Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said
 Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
 Which but today by feeding is allayed,
 Tomorrow sharpened in his former might;
 So, love, be thou; although today thou fill 5
 Thy hungry eyes even till they wink with fullness,
 Tomorrow see again, and do not kill
 The spirit of love with a perpetual dullness;
 Let this sad interim like the ocean be
 Which parts the shore, where two contracted new 10
 Come daily to the banks, that when they see
 Return of love, more blessed may be the view;
 Or call it winter, which being full of care
 Makes summer's welcome thrice more wished, more rare.

56] sonnet omitted by Benson 3, 5 today] too daie 4 sharpened] sharpned 7 Tomorrow] Too morrow 8 love] Loue 9 interim] Intrim ocean] Ocean 12 blessed] blest 13 Or] Capell; As Q,
*Riv Cam*³ winter] Winter 14 summer's] Sömers wished] wish'd

- 57 Claiming to be wholly subservient, physically and mentally, to the wishes and commitments of his young friend, the speaker none the less indicates that he is aware that his absent friend may not be employing his time well.
- 1 tend attend; wait for, care for, be solicitous towards
- 2 your desire Initially, especially after the plea for strengthened affection in the preceding sonnet, we may read this as 'your love for me'; but the lines that follow redefine it as 'your desire for me which is at present in abeyance', or 'your desire for others, which I must perforce accommodate'.
- 5 chide blame, complain of the world-without-end hour the hour that seems everlasting, seems to occupy a world of time; cf. OED world 6b, and LLL 5.2.779. The phrase is equivalent to Lat. in secula seculorum.
- 6 my sovereign a development of the imagery used in 33, where the young man was compared with the sovereign brightness of the sun, and addressed as my sun. The word may here have an ironical tinge; the youth is a sovereign to the speaker only because of the latter's devotion.
- 9 question with ask questions by means of
- 10 affairs business, concerns: although the association of the word with 'sexual involvement' is not found before 1709 (OED 3), the context suggests that some of the young man's preoccupations may be amorous.
suppose speculate on, guess at
- 11 naught Though naught is modified by the next line, its sense of 'having no moral value', especially in a sexual context (cf. R7 1.1.98), is possibly also applicable: while claiming to think no evil of his friend, the speaker hints that he is aware of the likelihood that he is up to no good.
- 12 those those who are with you
- 13 So . . . love so trusting a fool; such a complete, utter fool in your will Q's capitalization irresistibly suggests 'in the case of your own William Shakespeare', as well as 'with regard to your desire'.
- 14 Though . . . anything This broad concession indicates that the speaker's jealous thought encompasses the possibility of considerable wrongdoing by the youth – why else would he need to emphasize his, or love's, ability to 'think no ill' of what the youth is doing? The couplet activates the very suspicions which it claims to suppress.

57

Being your slave, what should I do but tend
 Upon the hours and times of your desire?
 I have no precious time at all to spend,
 Nor services to do, till you require;
 Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour 5
 Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
 Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
 When you have bid your servant once adieu;
 Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
 Where you may be, or your affairs suppose, 10
 But like a sad slave stay and think of naught,
 Save, where you are, how happy you make those.
 So true a fool is love, that in your will,
 Though you do anything, he thinks no ill.

5 world-without-end] world without end 6 I, my sovereign,] I (my souveraine) 13 will] Will 14 Though . . . anything,] (Though . . . any thing)

- 58 Continuing the image of the speaker as a slave to his young friend, the poet reluctantly tells him that he is entitled to act as independently as he wishes. While in 57 he made subjection to his friend's whims sound easy, it is here shown as requiring superhuman effort.
- 1 That god forbid subjunctive: = may that god forbid. Perhaps the god referred to is Cupid (not named until the penultimate sonnet); but Q's capitalized 'God' causes the reader initially to register an oath, 'God forbid'. that The use of the less personal that, rather than 'who', serves to filter out the conjecture that the Christian God is invoked.
- 2 that I should (even) in my own mind seek to regulate your enjoyments, or times when it 'pleases' you to see me; cf. l. 14 and note.
- 3 or seek to ask you for an itemization (account) of how you spend your time. The collocation of hand and account suggests a written enumeration, like a financial account-book; cf. 30.11 and n.
- 4 vassal . . . leisure your slave, who is obliged (bound) to wait until you have time for him
- 5 suffer endure, acquiesce in; with some undertow of 'sustain loss or injury' (Glossary, 2, 4) being . . . beck awaiting your summons, or 'beckoning' gesture
- 6 a dense conceit: = 'my prolonged absence from you, a consequence of the freedom of which you avail yourself, which to me is a form of imprisonment'
- 7 patience tame Tame appears to be a verb governed by let me in l. 5: '(Let me) govern and control my (im)-
- patience.' Most earlier editors, with the exception of Capell, have taken tame as an adjective.
to . . . check 'endure (hide) every reverse or disappointment, subjecting it to endurance'; or 'command (bid) every disappointment to a condition of patient forbearance'. For this sense of sufferance, cf. Glossary, 2.
- 8 'without holding you blameworthy for injuring me'
- 9 where you list wherever you feel like being; cf. 'the wind bloweth where it listeth', John, 3.8. That Shakespeare saw the wind as the archetypal image of freely chartered liberty is suggested by AYL 2.7.48 and H5 1.1.48.
charter privilege, entitlement
- 10 privilege authorize, license; cf. the analogously ironic application in Luc 621, 'To privilege dishonour'. The wider implication seems to be that 'your position (of privilege?) entitles you to spend your time however you like'.
- 11–12 to . . . crime 'It is up to you (or, it is your prerogative) to exonerate yourself of wrongs done by yourself, or to yourself': self-doing seems to suggest that the use the young man makes of his freedom may be morally injurious to himself, as well as harmful to his absent friend.
- 13 wait suggests, besides 'spend time in passive expectation', 'be in attendance, as on a monarch or lord'
- 14 suggests both 'not blame you for your demeanour towards me, whether it is friendly or adverse' (cf. the still-current phrase 'the Queen's pleasure') and 'not reprimand you for indulging in pleasure, whether you are spending your time well or badly'

58

That god forbid, that made me first your slave,
 I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
 Or at your hand th'account of hours to crave,
 Being your vassal bound to stay your leisure.
 O let me suffer, being at your beck, 5
 Th'imprisoned absence of your liberty,
 And patience tame, to sufferance bide each check,
 Without accusing you of injury.
 Be where you list, your charter is so strong
 That you yourself may privilege your time 10
 To what you will; to you it doth belong
 Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
 I am to wait, though waiting so be hell,
 Not blame your pleasure be it ill or well.

1 god] *Ard*¹; God Q, Malone 5 suffer, being . . . beck,] suffer (being . . . beck) Q, Malone, *Cam*²
 6 imprisoned] imprison'd 11 To] Do Malone, *Ard*¹

- 59 If (as some ancient writers suggest) the world goes through a succession of repetitive cycles, the young man's beauty may have both existed and been described poetically in the past; but the speaker ends by asserting that earlier poets have praised subjects worse.
- 1-2 If . . . new 'The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun' (Ecclesiastes, 1.9). This chapter was ordained to be read at Evening Prayer on 29 October (BCP, 45).
- 2-4 brains . . . child The image of the brain as a womb, giving birth to ideas and language, was commonplace; cf. Sidney, AS, 50.11; Son 76.8.
- 3 amiss adverbial: = erroneously, in a wrong way
- 4 a child (concept) of earlier times which is laboriously brought into being once again
- 5 record record: memory, the power of recollection, as in TN 5.1.253 and Ham 1.5.99
- 6 Even of even to the extent of five . . . sun The immediate impression is of the mind looking back 'a very long time': cf. Tit 1.1.350; but some have detected a reference to the 'Platonic' or Pythagorean Great Year, a period of time after which all the moving bodies in the cosmos were believed to return to their previous positions. Shakespeare was probably most familiar with this notion from the speech attributed to Pythagoras in Ovid, Met., 15.66ff.; cf. especially ll. 431-48, describing the 500-year life-cycle of the Phoenix.
- 7 antique ancient, with a suggestion of 'old-fashioned, out of date' (Glossary)
- 8 (a book) produced soon after the time when men first learned to express their thoughts in writing
- 9-10 what . . . this both 'how much writings of ancient times could say, when compared with this'; and 'what writers of former times could say if (an archetype of) this were their subject'
- 10 composed . . . frame refers both to the young man's body and to the poet's image of it: (a) the ordered beauty of your bodily harmony; (b) the amazing beauty of your body as articulated and ordered (composed) in my verse
- composed composèd
- 11 mended improved
- 12 whether . . . same 'whether the cycle of time has brought about an exact replication'; cf. l. 6n.
- 14 worse primarily suggests that the young man's beauty excels that of past ages, early poets having praised 'less excellent' persons; but undercut by a swaggering tone which invites the reading 'even worse': all poets lie and exaggerate, it is implied, but the wits of former days were exaggerating even more than I am.

- 60 Developing the temporal meditations of the preceding sonnet, the speaker considers the inevitable process of maturity and decay in the natural world, only to be counteracted by his own verse in praise of the young man. It is artfully placed at this numerical point in the sequence; cf. l. 2n.
- 1-4 Cf. Ovid, Met., 15.181-4, trans. Arthur Golding, The XV Bookes of . . . Metamorphoses (1567), ed. J.F. Nims (1965) (200-5): 'But looke, / As every wave dryves other fourth, and that that commes behynd / Both thrusteth and is thrust itself: even so the tymes by kynd / Doo fly and follow bothe at once, and evermore renew / For that that was before is left, and streyght there doth ensew / Another that was never erst.' Whereas the previous sonnet concerned the possibility of infinite cyclical repetition, this posits a cycle of perpetual movement and loss.
- 1 towards one syllable
- 2 our minutes plays on 'hour-minutes', the total of minutes in an hour being suggested by the sonnet's number
- 4 sequent toil successive effort(s) contend strive, with a sense of effortful forward movement
- 5 Nativity portmanteau word for 'that which is born', suggesting human beings both collectively and individually main broad expanse (OED 5b); an application extended from the sense of 'open sea'
- 6 Crawls to maturity suggests at once a crawling infant and a person tottering with age
wherewith with maturity
- 7 Crooked eclipses Eclipses are both the product of asymmetrical movements by the planets, and crooked in the sense of 'malign' in their effects on humanity; also, old people become bent.
glory beauty or magnificence; highest state of prosperity; also, perhaps, the light like a halo that 'crowns' the human being at the peak of perfection (OED 6, 8, 9a)
- 8 'The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away' (BCP, Order for the Burial of the Dead, from Job, 1.21): confound = destroy.
- 9 Time is imagined as armed with a sharp-pointed instrument (such as his traditional scythe) which pierces ('transfixes') the flourishing beauty of the young. To 'transfix' generally at this period meant to 'pierce or impale' cf. Spenser, FQ, 1.v.50; however, a counteracting sense of 'fix, imprint' is developed by the following line, which implies that time destroys the lineaments of beauty not by destroying them but by caricaturing them.
- 10 delves the parallels digs parallel lines, with a reference to parallels as military trenches (OED 3)
- 11 rarities choice specimens, marvels; perhaps developing the implied identification of the youth with the Phoenix in sonnet 59
nature's truth nature's essential integrity; an integrity which is natural, as in 54.2
- 12 nothing . . . mow All that comes into existence is subject to time's destruction; particularly so, perhaps, is the human capacity for reproduction which is associated with nothing; cf. 12.13-14 and nn.
- 13 to . . . hope until future, or hoped for, times; but in hope seems also to modify and make provisional the poet's assertion that his verse will defy time.

60

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end,
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.

Nativity, once in the main of light, 5

Crawls to maturity; wherewith being crowned
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And time, that gave, doth now his gift confound.

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow; 10

Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow.

And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

1 pebbled] pibled 2 minutes] minuites 12 scythe] sieth 14 despite] despight

- 61 Reverting to the theme of dreams of the beloved (cf. 43), the speaker asks, in the octave, whether his friend deliberately projects the image of himself in order to trouble and spy on him, concluding, in the sestet, that it is his own obsessive devotion that keeps him awake.
- 2 weary night transferred epithet: = night that induces weariness
- 4 shadows false likenesses: the word could be applied to portraits, or to actors, and does not necessarily suggest a lack of light.
- mock delude, tantalize (OED 3a)
- 6 So . . . home 'so far away from your body, which is your spirit's natural residence'; with an additional suggestion that the speaker is being spied on while far from home
- 8 '(Is the scrutiny of my ill-spent time) your object and meaning in jealousy watching over me?' Scope = an end in view, purpose, aim (OED 2a); tenor = drift, purpose (OED 11a).
- 10–11 my love . . . Mine own true love (a) my feeling of love; (b) the object of my love (either applied to either phrase)
- 12 To . . . watchman 'One good friend watches for another' (Tilley, F716).
- 13 watch . . . wake The speaker's 'watching' is associated with care and assiduity, while the young man 'wakes', it is implied, in OED's sense 1d, 'To sit up late for pleasure or revelry; to turn night into day'; and cf. Ham 1.4.8, 'The king doth wake tonight, and takes his rouse'.

- 62 In the first of two sonnets on his own decrepitude, the speaker first rejoices in his own merit and beauty, then acknowledges that the beauties he boasts of belong to the young man whom he loves, and only vicariously to himself.
- 1 self-love Cf. 3.8, where the addressee's self-tombed self-love inhibits reproduction: the sequence is in process of tracing a circle from the youth's sterile narcissism to the poet's.
- 4 inward inwardly
- 6 No . . . true no body so well-proportioned: cf. KL 1.2.8, where Edmund claims 'my shape as true / As honest madam's issue'.
of such account of such value; to be so highly esteemed
- 7 for myself for my own benefit; with regard to myself
- 8 (I calculate my value) in such a way that I excel everyone else in every area of excellence.
- 10 Beated acceptable form of 'beaten' = battered, weather-beaten, with perhaps a shade of 'experienced' (OED 4); cf. AYL 2.4.50.
chopped cracked, fissured tanned antiquity the process of ageing, personified as itself tanned with age; the process of ageing which 'tans' human skin, making it brown and leathery. According to the Grave-digger in Ham 5.1.162–8, tanners' skins became toughened with their trade; since Shakespeare's father was a 'whittawer', who prepared leather for gloves, Shakespeare may well have believed his own skin to have undergone this process (Chambers, Shakespeare, 1.12).
- 11 quite . . . read I interpret in a quite opposite sense
- 12 A self engaging in that kind of self-love would be guilty of sin (iniquity); or of 'inequity', failure to achieve a correct estimation.
- 14 Painting my age adorning, decorating my (old) age; or describing it in terms of your youthful beauty

62

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
 And all my soul, and all my every part;
 And for this sin there is no remedy,
 It is so grounded inward in my heart.
 Methinks no face so gracious is as mine, 5
 No shape so true, no truth of such account,
 And for myself mine own worth do define
 As I all other in all worths surmount.
 But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
 Beated and chopped with tanned antiquity, 10
 Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
 Self, so self-loving, were iniquity;
 'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I praise,
 Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

10 Beated] 'Bated Malone chopped] chopt Q, *Cam*² tanned] tand 11 self-love] selfe loue
 12 self-loving] selfe louing 13 Tis] T'is

- 63 Anticipating a time when the fair youth will be as old and decrepit as he is now, the speaker makes provision against the youth's loss of beauty by preserving it in poetry. It is surely not by chance that this sonnet on the severe changes brought about by the ageing process is positioned as number 63, the 'grand climacteric', = 7×9 , a figure associated with major life changes. Also, we are now exactly half-way through the 'fair youth' sequence, which ends with the imperfect 126 (see Introduction, p. 100).
- 1 Against in preparation for the time when; cf. MND 3.2.99; R2 3.4.28.
- 2 injurious 'wilfully inflicting injury or wrong' (OED 1); cf. TC 4.4.41-2: 'Injurious Time now with a robber's haste / Crams his rich thiev'ry up, he knows not how'.
o'erworn worn out, like a piece of shabby cloth
- 3 filled Though Q's 'fild' has been modernized to filled, the possibility cannot be excluded that the word should be 'filed', suggesting both 'carved with lines' and 'defiled': cf. Duncan-Jones, 'Modernizing'.
- 5 travailed As at 34.2, Q's spelling has been retained, to ensure that modern readers do not lose the simultaneous sense of 'labouring' and 'journeying'.
steepy difficult to ascend, like a steep hill; cf. Tim 1.1.75.
- 8 Stealing away The verb functions both (a) intransitively – the young man's beauties 'steal away', flee stealthily; and (b) transitively, with time's injurious hand and/or hours as the subject, which 'steal' the glories of youth: cf. 'the stealing hours of time', Ham 5.1.71.
- 9 For in preparation for; a resumption of the sense of Against in l. 1 fortify make a fortification or buttress; cf. 16.3-4, where progeny, rather than barren rhyme, was the means by which the youth was advised to fortify himself.
- 10 age's cruel knife repeats the rhythm of age's steepy night in l. 5, but conflates age with time, who is so often armed with a sharp implement, as in 60.9-10
- 12 though . . . life 'though (he will cut from human memory) the life of my lover': the apparent synonymy here of my love and my lover is disconcerting, but there is a possibility that My sweet love's beauty refers to the poet's imaginative vision of his beloved, in contrast to the mortal specificity of my lover's life.
- 13 black lines lines of poetry, forming black lines on the page; they appropriate and redefine the lines and wrinkles of l. 4.
- 14 he . . . green 'he will remain, in the poet's verses, fresh and youthful.' However, the word green also has associations with rawness and unripeness which introduce an acidic note; cf. VA 806; AC 1.5.74. Where we might anticipate a conventional paradox of black ink revealing the brightness or fairness of the love-object, as in 65.14, green suggests that the poet's lines may preserve the young man's callowness and immaturity as much as his consummate beauty.

63

Against my love shall be as I am now,
With time's injurious hand crushed and o'erworn;
When hours have drained his blood, and filled his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travailed on to age's steepy night, 5
And all those beauties whereof now he's king
Are vanishing, or vanished out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife, 10
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life.
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

2 crushed] crusht 3 drained] dreind filled] filld 5, 10 age's] Ages 6 king] King 7 vanished]
vanisht 8 spring] Spring

- 64 Viewing the operation of time in the world, the poet is prompted to reflect on the death of his love, which he laments in anticipation. The sonnet is formally organized, with three quatrains opening 'When I have seen', and a couplet which declares his response to what he has seen.
- 2 suggests the expensive splendour of elaborate funeral monuments, such as those to be seen in Westminster Abbey or St Paul's. The three components of rich proud cost, = opulent, arrogant expenditure, are matched and counteracted by outworn buried age, = men who have grown old and exhausted, or who lived long ago, and are now interred.
- 3 sometime lofty towers buildings which were once lofty: 'tower' (OED 1, 2) could refer to any tall building, such as a church, castle or monastery. down razed deliberately swept away or demolished (OED raze 5a and b); perhaps with specific reference to large religious buildings pulled down or reconstructed for secular use after Henry VIII's dissolution of the monasteries
- 4 brass . . . rage Even brass, though durable by nature, is perpetually subject to the depredations of humanity; eternal refers both to brass's supposed lastingness and to its continued vulnerability. If a specific reference is intended to Horace's claim that in his Odes he has constructed a monument aere perennius, 'more lasting than brass' (Odes, 3.30.1), there may be a covert suggestion that poetry, too, is vulnerable.
- 5-8 The poet turns his gaze from human artefacts to nature, viewing land and sea as greedy competitors.
- 7 main ocean; cf. R3 1.4.20.
- 8 Each side's gain is the other side's loss. The word store played a crucial part in sonnets 1-17, suggesting, at 11.9 and 14.12, the vital essence of the youth which requires to be reproduced; but here it seems to carry no promise of perpetuity.
- 9 interchange of state alternation or vicissitude of condition; with a secondary reference to 'state' in the political sense, anticipated in the image of dry land's kingdom in l. 6. For readers in 1609 an allusion to the end of Elizabeth's long reign and the beginning of James's in 1603 must have been irresistible.
- 10 to decay functions both as a noun, indicating the condition that a confounded, confused or destroyed condition may be brought to, and as an infinitive verb, governing both the interchange of state and state . . . confounded which the poet has seen decaying
- 11 Ruin has taught the speaker to ruminate partly because of the similarity of the verb 'ruinate', into which the consonant from me has been injected: 'my' thoughts are embraced by ruin, and even the word taught is only an aspirate away from thought. The proximity of 'ruminating' to 'ruinating' anticipates the swift removal of my love.
- 12 my love the object of my love; the feeling of love that I experience
- 14 weep to have weep while in possession of; weep with desire to possess

- 65 Recapitulating his survey of time's power to transform the world, the speaker searches desperately for a means to preserve human beauty, finding a fragile possibility of this in his own writing.
- 1-2 Since . . . power ellipsis for 'since (none of these elements) is exempt from the operation of sad mortality'
- 1 brass This example, from l. 4 of the previous sonnet, may be placed first because of its traditional association with poetry. If the 'brass' to which Horace compared his poetic monument (see 64.4n.) is itself vulnerable, it is hinted at the outset that to hope to counter the operation of time by means of language may be futile.
- 2 o'er-sways their power is more powerful than they are; o'er-sways has political connotations which recall the images of kingdom and state in the preceding sonnet.
- 3 with against, confronted by
- 4 action partly a continuation of the legal metaphor of hold a plea, = legal process, legal action (OED 7, 8); partly a more general sense of 'agency, force or influence' (OED 1, 2). Neither as litigant nor as agent generally can a flower be imagined as potent.
- 6 wreckful causing 'wreck' or destruction; 'wreck' is interchangeable, in Elizabethan usage, with modern 'wreck'.
- 7 stout strong, resolute
- 9 fearful meditation a meditation which is born of fear and/or provokes fear
- 11 his swift foot Time is here personified as a speedy runner, as in the proverb 'Time flees away without delay' (Tilley, T327).
- 12 spoil pillage, destruction, resuming the warfare metaphor of ll. 5-6
- o'er Both compositors consistently print 'o'er' as 'ore': cf. 5.8, 12.4, 23.8, 30.10 and many other examples, such as l. 2 of the present sonnet. It seems likely therefore that Q's 'or' represents 'ore' (= o'er), rather than being a mistake for 'of', as Malone and most modern editors have suggested.
- 13 might efficacy
- 14 my love my object of love; my feeling of love

65

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
 But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
 How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
 Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
 O how shall summer's honey breath hold out 5
 Against the wrackful siege of batt'ring days
 When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
 Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?
 O fearful meditation! Where, alack,
 Shall time's best jewel from time's chest lie hid? 10
 Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back,
 Or who his spoil o'er beauty can forbid?
 O none, unless this miracle have might:
 That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

3 this] his Malone 10 jewel] Iewell 12 o'er] Capell; or Q, Booth; of Malone

- 66 Weary of the corruption and hypocrisy of the age he lives in, the speaker longs for death, restrained only by the thought of abandoning his love. The catalogue of eleven wrongs is analogous to the sevenfold catalogue in Hamlet's 'To be or not to be' speech, Ham 3.1.70–6, though it is fear of 'something after death', not of deserting his love, that restrains Hamlet. This despairing poem is probably located where it is by design. Multiples of six have adverse connotations, alluding to the biblical 'beast' associated with universal corruption: all human beings 'had the marke, or the number of his name . . . and his number is, sixe hundred threescore and sixe' (Revelation, 13.16–18).
- 1 Tired with tired of; cf. Per 2 Gower 37.
- 2 desert synecdoche for 'those who are deserving'
- 3 needy . . . jollity empty, worthless people dressed up in extravagant (by implication, costly) clothes. The boorish Cloten, who adorns himself in Posthumus's clothes, is described as 'that harsh, noble, simple nothing' (Cym 3.4.135; cf. also 4.2.192–3, where 'Triumphs for nothing' are identified with 'jollity for apes'). For jollity as 'finery of dress or array', cf. OED 7.
- 4 unhappily forsworn suggests both those who have kept vows and then regrettably broken them, and those who have kept their own vows truly but have been maliciously betrayed by others: cf. OED unhappily.
- 5 'honours and adornments disgracefully bestowed on undeserving recipients'
- 6 strumpeted suggests both chastity calumniated by being accused of whoredom, as in the defamation of Hero in MA, Desdemona in Oth and Hermione in WT; and chaste girls raped and made into 'strumpets'. The resemblance of the word to 'trumpeted' accentuates the public and notorious nature of the disgrace done to maiden virtue.
- 7 right true, absolute: while the previous line suggests the sexual degradation of women, this points to wider – possibly male – qualities of perfection which are slandered or dishonoured.
- 8 'strength deprived of its effect by an authority which is itself weak': the image suggests the power exercised over young male courtiers by the ageing Elizabeth during the last years of her reign, the most conspicuous example being the house arrest imposed on the Earl of Essex in 1600/1. To form a rhyme with strumpeted the last word needs to be pronounced as 'disable-led', which generates a further play on strength as governed (led) by limping sway.
- 9 Though 'art' normally alluded to skills generally, not especially to creative art, the image of it as tongue-tied suggests a reference to censorship of literature, to which Elizabethan dramatists were frequently subject.
- 10 doctor-like Doctor is here used in OED's sense 2a, 'One who, by reason of his skill in any branch of knowledge, is competent to teach it'.
- 11 plain truth wrongly described as folly or stupidity: reminiscent of Lear's dismissal of Cordelia for plain speaking. The phrase simple truth is differently applied in 138.8.
- 12 Another version of the concept in l. 8, with the metaphor changed from political to military: good is enslaved to, and in the service of, captain ill. The rank of captain had some associations with corruption and false authority, as in 2H4 2.4. 136–47.
- 13 Tired with Like the repetitions in the catalogue itself (cf. previous note), the repetition of the opening phrase enacts the wearying, tedious experience of living in a corrupt society.
- 14 to die if I die; in order to die; and the rhyme of die with cry in l. 1 suggests further iterance.
I . . . alone, 'I leave my beloved lonely'; or 'I withdraw from my emotion of love'; or 'I desist from importuning my love-object'; or even 'I leave only my love, nothing else' (cf. Booth, 249–50).

66

Tired with all these for restful death I cry:
 As to behold desert a beggar born,
 And needy nothing trimmed in jollity,
 And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
 And gilded honour shamefully misplaced, 5
 And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
 And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
 And strength by limping sway disabled,
 And art made tongue-tied by authority,
 And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill, 10
 And simple truth miscalled simplicity,
 And captive good attending captain ill:
 Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
 Save that to die I leave my love alone.

1, 13 Tired] Tyr'd 3 nothing] Nothing trimmed] trimd 5 misplaced] misplast 7 disgraced] disgrac'd 10 folly, doctor-like,] Folly (Doctor-like) 11 simple truth] simple-Truth miscalled] miscalde simplicity] Simplicitie 12 captive good] captiue-good captain] Captaine

- 67 This follows on from the preceding sonnet's account of a hopelessly corrupt society, replacing the question of the speaker's death-wish with that of whether his friend should live. In existing in this environment, the fair youth lays himself open to exploitation and imitation; but he is kept alive by nature as an exemplar of what beauty was like in earlier, better, days.
- 1 with infection primarily 'in the company of moral corruption'; but there is a secondary implication that, as in sonnets 34–5, the addressee himself is 'infected', i.e. morally faulty.
- 3–4 'so that sinful persons may advance themselves at his expense, or through his example, bestowing specious adornments on themselves by association with him': lace here = 'To ornament or trim with lace' or 'To mark as with (gold or silver) lace or embroidery' (OED 5, 6a).
- 6 steal dead seeing appropriate a lifeless appearance; the suggestion is that the youth's authentic beauty is falsely mimicked either in art, such as portraiture, or in vain attempts by others to copy his appearance in their own.
- 7 poor beauty primarily, perhaps, 'inferior beauty, beauty which falls short of the youth's glorious archetype'; but poor inevitably carries some undertones of sympathy for individuals manifesting lesser attractiveness.
- 8 Roses of shadow The 'rose', as in beauty's rose, 1.2, encapsulates the idea of the highest summation of human beauty; Roses of shadow therefore suggests 'imitation roses', which mimic, but do not transmit the inner worth of, the youth's beauty.
- 9 bankrupt Nature is bankrupt in the sense that all her wealth of human beauty has, supposedly, been bestowed on the fair youth, leaving none to bestow on other human progeny.
- 11 exchequer source of revenue, like the 'King's exchequer', or treasury; cf. OED 2 and figurative application in 5a.
- 12 proud of many puzzling phrase, for nature's 'pride' is hard to reconcile with the analysis of her bankruptcy; or the sense may be 'proud (mother) of many offspring', who consequently need to be nourished or adorned with what the youth has 'gained' from her. Capell's plausible emendation to 'prov'd' would yield the sense 'as many have discovered'. Another possible emendation is 'mon[e]y' for many, suggesting that nature flaunts the wealth she borrows from the youth; in combination with Kerrigan's emendation of 'proud' to 'prived', this would spell out nature's bankrupt condition.
- 13 stores keeps in her store, as in 11.9; but the speaker no longer proposes that progeny should perpetuate the stored-up beauty contained in the youth.

67

Ah, wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And lace itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek, 5
And steal dead seeing of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now nature bankrupt is,
Beggared of blood to blush through lively veins? 10
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

8 rose] Rose 10 Beggared] Beggerd 12 proud] prov'd Capell; 'prived Kerrigan

- 68 Still on the theme of the present age's decadence, the poet celebrates the youth's authentic beauty, a throwback to an earlier, better, age, before wigs and borrowed adornments created false beauty. Whatever the original date of composition, it is unlikely that it could have been published during the lifetime of the period's most celebrated wearer of false hair, Elizabeth I. Wigs and false hair must have often been in Shakespeare's thoughts both because he himself was a bald actor, and also because in 1604, and possibly for some time earlier, he lodged in Silver St, the centre of the wig trade (Schoenbaum, Life, 209).
- 1 map The metaphorical application of the word to the human face, as an index of the whole body, began very early; cf. 2H6 3.1.203; TN 3.2.85. In the early twentieth century the word became a slang expression for a face (OED 1a, 2a, 2d).
- 2 as . . . now primarily suggests the authenticity of natural, living beauty; but with strong undertones of transience, as in Job, 14.2, quoted in BCP, Order for the Burial of the Dead, as 'He cometh up and is cut down like a flower'; cf. also the proverb 'It fades like a flower' (Tilley, F386).
- 3 borne Q's spelling has been retained, giving the sense 'carried, displayed' or 'endured, tolerated'; but there is doubtless also a play on 'born', especially after the word bastard, suggesting a contrast between recent, illegitimate births and the youth's embodiment of an archetype of beauty.
- 4 inhabit on dwell on; with a play on the 'habit', or adornment, assumed by the living brow
- 6 the . . . sepulchres what justly belongs to or is owned by the graves of the deceased; cf. 'So are those crisped snaky golden locks / Which make such wanton gambols with the wind / Upon supposed fairness, often known / To be the dowry of a second head, / The skull that bred them in the sepulchre' (MV 3.2.92–6).
- 8 beauty's dead fleece transferred epithet: = the fleece [hair] of dead beauty. For a woman's hair as 'golden fleece', cf. MV 1.1.170.
- 9 holy antique hours metonym for the beauty (of the youth's cheek) which was the product of those hours, connected by rhyme to the authentic flowers of l. 2
- 10 itself The implied subject is still his cheek, representing beauty, as in ll. 1–2.
- 11 'not exploiting the youthful beauty of another to reinforce his own'
- 12 old old (beauty); former (beauty). There is a subtle distinction between the poet's claim that the youth's beauty derives legitimately from the distant past – holy antique hours – and his scorn for beauty falsely composed of the appurtenances of those lately dead.
- 13 store retain in store; fill with beauties
- 14 of yore long ago, with a reinforcing pun on 'of your(s)'

68

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty lived and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were borne,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead, 5
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head;
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself and true, 10
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
 And him as for a map doth nature store
 To show false art what beauty was of yore.

1 outworn] out-worne 2 lived and died] liu'd and dy'ed 13 nature] Nature 14 art] Art

- 69 To outward view, the youth's beauty and merit is faultless, and is so reputed; but those whose gaze extends to his moral character find it degraded.
- 1 The parts = beauties and/or accomplishments that are visible to everyone; cf. 17.4, 37.7 and passim. For a comparable distinction between visible beauty and unknown inward qualities, cf. Cym 1.6.17.
- 2 Want lack that . . . mend that heartfelt thoughts could improve: i.e., the youth's parts could not, to outward view, be bettered in imagination.
- 3 due Q's 'end' may be the result of compositorial error, resulting from 'turned letters' ('u' for 'n') and/or a failure of the usual process of converting the correct order to 'mirror-writing' as viewed on the composing-stick; cf. McKerrow, 257, 9–10. Alternatively or additionally, the compositor's eye may have slipped to mend in the previous line. Booth (253) describes this sonnet as 'sloppily printed throughout'.
- 4 even . . . commend Even probably governs foes, = 'so that even your enemies praise you', rather than 'in such a manner as enemies give praise'.
- 5 Thy one of Q's 'thy'/'their' errors; cf. 26.12n.
- 7 other accents other (less favourable) tones confound undermine, destroy (cf. 60.8); but there may also be a sense of 'confuse, complicate'.
- 9 look into investigate closely; with the possible suggestion of 'look to see if there is any . . .' (OED look 16 a–c)
- 10 that refers to 'the beauty of thy mind' in guess by conjecture, estimate
- 11 Then . . . thoughts Most modern editors (e.g. Ingram and Redpath, Booth) enclose churls by commas, making it an adjective applied to those same tongues; however, an antithesis seems to be set up between 'kind eyes' and 'churlish thoughts'.
- 12 weeds often used by Shakespeare as an image of moral corruption; cf. e.g., R2 3.4.38; 2H4 4.1.11; H8 5.1.52.
- 14 soil Neither Q's 'solye' nor any of the many proposed emendations yields a wholly satisfactory sense; but soil is the most plausible, both because reversals of letter-order are a feature of this part of Q (cf. 'end' for 'due', l. 3; rn'wd' for 'ruin'd', 73.4), and because it yields a reasonable, if slightly strained, sense: 'the basis (ground, soil) of the disparity between your fair appearance and foul moral reputation is that you are debasing yourself, perhaps by keeping unworthy company'. The ease with which the word 'common' could slide from 'widespread' to 'morally obnoxious' is illustrated in Ham 1.2.72–4. Alternatively or additionally, soil may derive from the obsolete verb, a variant of 'assoil', meaning 'To resolve, clear up, expound or explain' (OED 3), functioning here as if it meant 'the solution'. Shakespeare could have selected the odd word 'soil' in preference to some more familiar word such as 'cause' because it opens up an additional play on 'common soil': 'you keep common, or vulgar, company'.

69

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view
 Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
 All tongues, the voice of souls, give thee that due,
 Utt'ring bare truth, even so as foes commend:
 Thy outward thus with outward praise is crowned. 5
 But those same tongues that give thee so thine own
 In other accents do this praise confound,
 By seeing further than the eye hath shown;
 They look into the beauty of thy mind,
 And that in guess they measure by thy deeds; 10
 Then churls their thoughts (although their eyes were kind)
 To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds.
 But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
 The soil is this, that thou dost common grow.

3 tongues, the . . . souls,] tongs (the . . . soules) 3 due] Capell; end Q 4 commend] Commend
 5 Thy] Capell; Their Q 8 further] farther 14 soil] Benson; solye Q

- 70 Continuing the theme of the youth's bad reputation, the poet sets out to defend him on the ground that his surpassing beauty inevitably makes him the target of envious slander.
- 1 shall . . . defect will not be attributed to your weakness: the declarative shall not be heralds a sustained rhetorical attempt to exonerate the youth from the allegations of the hostile tongues in 69: 'shall not be (viewed as) your defect (if I can help it)'.
- 2 'Envy shoots at the fairest mark' (Tilley, E175): the fact that beauty and virtue were subject to calumny was a strong Renaissance preoccupation, often linked with the most famous painting of antiquity, the Calumny of Apelles. Hamlet warns Ophelia 'be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny', Ham 3.1.137–8; cf. also Ham 1.3.38 and MM 3.2.174.
- 3 suspect suspèct; suspicion is the adornment (or invariable accompaniment) of beauty. The hyperbole is such an unusual one that it is difficult to filter out a counterpointing suggestion that beauty's ornaments are suspect (adj.), i.e. questionable, specious.
- 4 A crow adjectival noun applied to suspect, which inauspiciously blackens beauty's fairness.
- 5 So . . . good so long as you are good approve prove, demonstrate
- 6 Thy Cf. 26.12n.
being . . . time perhaps suggests,
- referring back to 69.1–5, 'being so admired and sought after at the present moment'. The concept of time's love in 124.3 seems comparably to denote love or popularity that is merely temporal, influenced by current reputation.
- 7 canker vice vice which is like the canker-worm or caterpillar (Glossary 2)
- 8 thou present'st you exhibit, display, are characterized by (OED present v. 4a)
unstained unstainèd
prime prime of life, youth or early manhood: it is not clear whether the youth's prime is now complete, as passed by might imply, or whether he is still in it.
- 9 the . . . days the vices lying in wait to ensnare the young; the military image resumes the suggestion of archery from mark in l. 2.
- 10 either not tempted, or triumphant over the onslaughts of temptation
- 11 cannot . . . praise 'cannot exalt your reputation to such an extent as to'
- 12 envy, evermore enlarged enlarged = set at liberty: the image of envy as perpetually at large is strongly reminiscent of Spenser's FQ, 6.xii.38–41, in which the many-tongued Blatant Beast is bound in chains by Calidore, but soon escapes, and attacks everyone he can find, including the poet.
- 13 suspect suspicion, as in l. 3
- 14 owe possess, own

- 71 Anticipating the aftermath of his death (threescore and ten sonnets being now accomplished), the poet implores the youth to forget him quickly, and to forget even that he was the author of the sonnets, so that he will not be compromised by association with the dead poet. Like Christina Rossetti's sonnet 'Remember', this plea for oblivion must inevitably, if read at all, function as a memorial.
- 1-2 Do not let your mourning for me, after my death, last longer than the sound of the funeral bell that will be tolled for me. It would be in the power of the dead speaker's heirs to commission a prolonged tolling of the bell, as Shakespeare appears to have done for the burial of his actor brother Edmund on 31 December 1607 in St Saviour's, Southwark, paying twenty shillings for 'a forenoone knell of the great bell' (Chambers, Shakespeare, 2.18; Schoenbaum, Life, 26).
- 2 surly sullen stern, gloomy (OED surly, with this example); and 'Of a deep, dull or mournful tone' (OED sullen 3b).
- 4 From . . . world Cf. AC 5.2.311-12: 'Cleo. What should I stay? - / Char. In this vile world', where Capell is surely correct in emending F's 'wilde' to 'vile' (Elizabethan spelling 'vilde'); cf. also Young Clifford's exclamation on seeing his father dead, 'O let the vile world end', 2H6 5.2.40.
- with . . . dwell 'I have said to corruption, Thou art my father: to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister' (Job, 17.14).
- 6 so so much; in such a manner
- 8 make you woe cause you to be sorrowful
- 10 compounded combined with; cf. 2H4 1.2.8.
- 11 rehearse repeat, utter: if the friend was accustomed to call him 'William', he would find 'Will' assonated in bell . . . dwell in ll. 2 and 4, and I am in 1 and 3, hinting at a chiming of the poet's name in the tolling of the bell. Cf. Portia's use of rhymes in '-èd' to prompt Bassanio to choose 'lead', MV 3.2.63-5.
- 12 decay fall away, die; cf. Luc 23.
- 13 wise world sarcastic: = the world in its wisdom, especially since the phrase echoes vile world in l. 4.
- look . . . moan investigate the cause of your sorrow
- 14 And . . . me If, as sonnets 135-6 suggest, the youth shares the poet's Christian name, William, the repetition of this name would inevitably implicate him in his grief, confusing mourner and mourned.

- 72 Continues from the end of the preceding sonnet, with another plea for oblivion which functions as a reminder. If the young man is pressed to say what virtues his dead friend had, he should not lie on his behalf, but suppress the recollection of him.
- 1 task . . . recite challenge you to tell (OED task 2b, with this example)
- 2 lived in me was in me (while I lived)
- 4 nothing worthy prove (a) 'apprehend (prove) nothing of value'; possibly undercut by (b), 'demonstrate that even nothing has value'
- 7 hang . . . I the image derives from the practice of suspending epitaphs and trophies on the hearse or funeral monument of the deceased. The use of I for 'me' not only achieves the needed rhyme with lie, but activates a pun on the poet's 'deceased eye' – 'I shall not live to see it'.
deceased deceased
- 8 niggard miserly
- 9 in this in this respect
- 10 speak . . . untrue 'speak well of me at the price of being untruthful'; 'speak well of me, who am "untrue", i.e. morally flawed'
- 13 'That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders. Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, foolishness: All these evil things come from within, and defile the man' (Mark, 7.20–3): though generally read as referring to the production of poems, as in 38.11 or 103.1, there is a connected suggestion of shameful actions and desires.
- 14 so should you so you too ought to be ashamed; or so will you, too, be brought into disgrace if you stand by me.
things nothing worth Primarily suggests 'that which is of no value, i.e. the dead poet'; but there may also be a reference to the poet's words, as in 'who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?' (Job, 24.25).

72

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit lived in me that you should love,
After my death (dear love) forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove; 5
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I
Than niggard truth would willingly impart;
O, lest your true love may seem false in this, 10
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me, nor you:
 For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
 And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

- 73 This sonnet explores the young man's perception of the poet's decrepitude through a series of images of decay, concluding that this strengthens, or should strengthen, his love.
- 2 yellow . . . few The reversal of the steadily diminishing order – the reader expects 'or few, or none' – ensures that we focus on several stages of the process of seasonal decay, which includes both the leafless trees of mid-winter and the partly stripped trees of mid-autumn, rather than simply on the period when the stripping of vegetation is complete. Since Shakespeare was bald, a visual analogy may be implied between an almost-leafless tree and the almost-hairless head, a process which may in a specific as well as a general sense be viewed in me.
- 3 shake against shiver in anticipation of (cf. the temporal use of Against in 63.1); shiver in response to
- 4 Bare ruined choirs Primarily, the tree branches are imagined as those 'Quires and places where they sing' (BCP, Morning and Evening Prayer) which in summer were the haunts of songbirds; however, the phrase Bare ruined choirs also inevitably evokes visual recollections of chancels of abbeys left desolate by Henry VIII's dissolution of the monasteries. Q's 'rn'wd' is one of several errors of reversal made by Compositor B in sigs E1' – E4'; cf. 'end' for due in 69.3; cf. also 'wiht' for with, 23.14, also the work of Compositor B; and 'stainteh' for staineth, 33.14, this time Compositor A. Here there is also a minim error, the MS having presumably read 'ruin'd' or 'rvin'd'.
- 5 twilight Shakespeare's only use of the word, whose relative unfamiliarity may be indicated by Q's hyphenation such day such a day; or such day-
- light, in the form of afterglow
- 8 Death's second self Sleep, rather than night, is commonly called 'the elder brother of death' (cf. Sidney, OA, 88, and Tilley, S526); but the metonymic transfer to night is easily made.
- seals . . . rest suggests both 'closes everything up in repose, as in a coffin which is "sealed"'; and 'closes all eyes', as in 'seel' = sew up the eyes of a falcon. The word rest hints at death as an end which is as much desired as feared.
- 10 his youth Since Elizabethan English lacked the genitive 'its', his should not automatically be construed as personalizing fire; however, followed by deathbed, it does naturally suggest the dying embers of a human life.
- 12 'Eaten up by that which it ate up', cf. tempus edax rerum, tuque, invidiosa vetustas, Ovid, Met., 15.234–6, a phrase which immediately follows an image of Helen looking at her wrinkled face in a mirror. The larger subject of that is presumably time, as in Ovid; the human body was brought to maturity (nourished) by the same temporal process which destroys it.
- 13 which . . . strong tonally ambivalent: = either declarative of the existing strength of the youth's love, or carrying a note of hope: 'which (will) make your love more strong'; or simply descriptive, 'yours must be a very strong love, to be capable of being bestowed on a transient object'
- 14 To . . . well to love that (love-object) fully, heartily; conceivably there is a play on 'Will', i.e. 'to love that man called William'.
leave picks up leaves from l. 2, re-applying it as a verb, = 'be separated from'

- 74 Revoking his appeal to the youth in 71 to forget the author of these sonnets, the poet implores him to retain the better part of him, which will survive in his verse after death.
- 1 be contented stress should fall strongly on be, since the implication is: 'despite what I said in the preceding sonnet about loving my ageing body, remain untroubled'.
that fell arrest the arrival of death, seen as an officer coming to apprehend a criminal; fell = fierce, terrible, as in 'one fell swoop', Mac 4.3.219.
- 2 Without all bail without any possibility of release from prison
- 3 in . . . interest some right of possession or continued residence in the line of verse which you read: for interest cf. 'where life hath no more interest but to breathe', AYL 5.1.8. Though line might also suggest the thread of human life spun by the Fates, or the line of offspring, neither seems applicable here.
- 5 reviewest survey, or resurvey review see once more
- 6 very part true portion: cf. 'thou art all the better part of me', 39.2.
- 7 The earth . . . earth 'We therefore commit his body to the ground, earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust', The Order for the Burial of the Dead, BCP, 310.
- 9–11 The three metaphorical phrases the dregs, The prey, and The coward conquest all describe my body being dead.
- 9 the . . . life literalizes spirit in the previous line, treating death as a process of distillation in which the physical body is left behind as dregs
- 11 A much-discussed line: momentarily it may seem that the poet anticipates self-slaughter, but it is more likely that the wretch whose sharp implement has taken possession of the speaker's body is personified death, seen in ll. 1–2 as a relentless officer carrying the dead man to judgement, and now as a ruthless assassin. However, the tone is confusing, both because it is not clear whether coward applies chiefly to the terror of the dying man or to the 'cowardly' attack made on him, and because elsewhere Shakespeare often uses wretch in terms of pity or tenderness; cf., e.g., VA 680, Oth 3.3.90, KL 3.4.28.
- 12 remembered remembered: = (a) recollected; (b) brought back to life, with the bodily 'members' put together again
- 13–14 The distinction between that (body due to be destroyed by death) and this (poem that you are reading) is developed from ll. 1 and 5, and here, because of the threefold repetition of that and twofold repetition of this, produces an effect of quickfire quibbling, with this ultimately cracked open to reveal its underlying relationship with thee.

74

But be contented when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away;
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review 5
The very part was consecrate to thee;
The earth can have but earth, which is his due,
My spirit is thine, the better part of me;
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead, 10
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered:
 The worth of that, is that which it contains,
 And that is this, and this with thee remains.

10 prey] pray 12 Too] To

- 75 This sonnet sustains a metaphor of the friend's image and presence as nourishment to the poet, in relation to which he alternately starves and feasts.
- 1 as food to life equivalent to the nourishment which sustains (human) life
- 2 sweet seasoned showers suggests both showers that fall in a 'sweet season', spring, and, continuing the metaphor of eating, showers which are 'sweetly seasoned', delicious in flavour
- 3 'in order to attain the peace which is embodied in you I engage in such conflict': the odd expression peace of you supports a pun, which extends the metaphor of hunger and anticipates that of money, on 'piece of you'. According to Booth (263) 'This line passes all understanding'.
- 6 Doubting fearing that; cf. 'I doubt some danger does approach you nearly', Mac 4.2.67.
- 8 Then bettered elliptical: may suggest 'then bettering that best in the desire . . .'; or, as Booth (263) has it, 'made better, made happier'
- 9 Sometime at times; cf. 18.5.
- 10 clean utterly, wholly (OED adv. 5b)
- 11 starved starvèd
- 11 Possessing or pursuing anticipates the depiction of sexual desire in 129.9, 'Mad in pursuit, and in possession so'
- 12 must . . . took must be derived from you in the future; or, can be derived from you alone
- 13 pine and surfeit suffer from too little food or too much
- 14 Or either
- all The young man is the speaker's all; cf. 31.14, 40.1, 109.14, 112.5.

75

So are you to my thoughts as food to life,
 Or as sweet seasoned showers to the ground;
 And for the peace of you I hold such strife
 As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found:
 Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon 5
 Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure;
 Now counting best to be with you alone,
 Then bettered that the world may see my pleasure;
 Sometime all full with feasting on your sight,
 And by and by clean starved for a look, 10
 Possessing or pursuing no delight
 Save what is had, or must from you be took.
 Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
 Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

2 sweet seasoned] sweet season'd Q; sweet-season'd Malone 8 bettered] betterd Q; better Capell
 9 Sometime] Ard^l; Some-time Q 14 away.] away,

- 76 Apologizing for the stylistic monotony of his verse, the poet ascribes this to the constancy of his affection and its object. The sonnet resumes the theme of 38 (which is 38 sonnets further back), where the sweet argument of the youth was expected to inspire unlimited invention.
- 1 barren of deficient in, lacking
- 4 To new literary styles and unusual combinations (of genre, types of rhetoric, or poetic diction): OED cites this line under 'compound' sb. 2c, defining it as 'A compound word, a verbal compound'. Shakespeare himself may be glancing aside at Drayton's ongoing revision and republication of his sonnet sequence Idea, originally published in 1594, but appearing in extensively revised and expanded versions in 1599, 1600, 1602 and 1605 (see Introduction, pp. 14–15); or Daniel's revised and expanded sonnet sequence Delia in 1601–2. According to Drayton's editors, 'In his new sonnets [Drayton] emphasizes his difference from other sonneteers . . . and his lighthearted readiness to experiment, to range sportively "in all Humors", "wilde, madding, jocond, & irreguler"' (Drayton, 5.138–9).
- 5 Why . . . one Why do I persist in writing in the same manner? However, all one may also anticipate alone in 79.2; the poet writes in isolation as well as in a solipsistic style.
- 6 a noted weed a distinctive, recognizable garb or livery: a metaphor for a characteristic literary style
- 7 In his poem prefixed to the First Folio Jonson stressed the distinctive and authentic character of the lines Shakespeare fathered: 'Looke how the fathers face / Liues in his issue, euen so, the race / Of Shakespeares minde, and manners brightly shines / In his well torned, and true-filed lines' (Jonson, 8.392).
- tell Q's 'fel' is probably one of Compositor B's errors of reversal, in this case the result of a confusion between 't' and 'f'; cf. 73.4n.
- 8 their that of his words, considered collectively
- 9 of about, concerning: cf. Lat. de; there is also a suggestion that what he writes derives directly from the youth.
- 10 argument subject-matter; with a subsidiary suggestion of contention or dispute between you and love: cf. thy lovely argument, 79.5.
- 11 all my best the best I can do dressing . . . new rearranging old words, or ornamenting old words to make them seem like new ones; continues the clothing metaphor of ll. 7–8, in which words are personified as children dressed in their parent's livery
- 12 suggests that his words are like old coins, capable of supporting repeated transactions, or like sexual emissions from an almost-exhausted source; cf., 4.1–2n.
- 13 The identification of the poet's verse and its subject-matter with the sun's cycle simultaneously elevates the youth and makes him sound tedious; there may be an association also between iterative 'sonnets' and iterative 'suns'.
- 14 still . . . told suggests both the repeated relation of an old narrative and the repeated counting (telling) of a hoard of coins. The close links with sonnet 38, with which 76 shares both a general subject and four key words, invention, sweet, write and argument, also reinforce the notion of repetition.

76

Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
 So far from variation or quick change?
 Why with the time do I not glance aside
 To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
 Why write I still all one, ever the same, 5
 And keep invention in a noted weed,
 That every word almost doth tell my name,
 Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
 O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
 And you and love are still my argument: 10
 So all my best is dressing old words new,
 Spending again what is already spent:
 For as the sun is daily new and old,
 So is my love still telling what is told.

1 pride,] pride? 4 new-found] new found 7 tell] Capell; fel Q 13 sun] Sun

- 77 As if to reinforce his self-description as a monotonous and old-fashioned poet in the previous sonnet, the speaker deploys the hackneyed figure of correlatio, much used by Sidney, and popular in sonnets of the early 1590s; it was parodied by Sir John Davies in the fifth of his 'Gullinge Sonnets' (Davies, 165–6, 392). Taking three objects, a mirror, a timepiece and a notebook, he defines three processes by means of which the youth may achieve self-improvement, culminating in his illumination from the perusal of his own words. Though it has often been suggested that the poem is designed to accompany three gifts, or a gadget incorporating all three, there is no clear indication of this, and the echo of thy glass in 3.1 counts against the notion. Metaphorically, all three may be found in Son itself, which offers an admonitory image of the youth, a chronicle of his subjection to time and pages which await his annotation.
- At this, the half-way point in the total of 154 sonnets, it appears that the poet is relinquishing his own pen in favour of that of his beloved.
- 1 wear Though Charles Gildon's emendation of Q's 'were' (Rollins, 1.198) has been adopted, yielding the sense 'wear out, endure the onslaughts of time', there is no doubt also a sense of 'once were': 'looking at how your beauties are now will remind you painfully of how they used to be'.
- 2 dial probably a portable, and mechanical, clock or watch, as in AYL 2.7.20, rather than a sundial, which would not be a personal possession with the same intimacy
- waste are spent, pass away, with a subsidiary sense of 'are squandered'
- 3 vacant leaves (a) the blank pages of a notebook; (b) white spaces in Son which await annotation by the beloved: the speaker's capacity for self-denigration may extend to the description of pages with his own sonnets on them as vacant.
- 4 this book The natural presumption on first reading is that this book = the volume Son, as in this, 74.5, 14; but whether the reference is to Son or to a blank notebook, it becomes apparent in ll. 11–14 that the youth is to be instructed by his own writings, not the poet's.
- 5 While sonnet 3 ('Look in thy glass . . .') suggested that the youth's mirror would show him youthful perfection, with wrinkles in l. 12 a future hazard, it appears that time has elapsed, for the speaker is now in no doubt that he will see wrinkles, which are truly reflected.
- 6 mouthed graves graves which are wide open in readiness to devour the youth, like the grave which 'doth gape' in readiness to swallow Falstaff (2H4 5.5.57); cf. also 'What is thy body but a swallowing grave?', VA 757.
- mouthed mouthèd
- memory a reminder (Glossary, 1); a memento mori
- 7 dial's shady stealth Though this image has been used to support an interpretation of 'dial' as a sundial, casting a varying shadow, it applies equally well to the slow movement of the hands of a mechanical clock or watch which cast a shadow on the face. In either case the indicator of time moves 'stealthily' as it 'steals' each successive moment, but a clock, with its pair of hands, is more anthropomorphic in theft.
- 8 Time's thievish progress Cf. 'the pilot's glass / Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass', AW 2.1.164–5. Time, the 'ceaseless lackey to eternity' (Luc 967), moves forward by stealing from the present moment.
- 6 memory here used in the sense of 'power of recall'
- 10 waste blanks The conventional emendation of Q's 'blacks', based on a plausible supposition that the MS used a contraction sign for 'n', has been adopted with some reluctance. Reading (b) of l. 3 permits the description of pages of Son, though marked

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
 Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste,
 The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
 And of this book, this learning mayst thou taste:
 The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show 5
 Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
 Thou by thy dial's shady stealth mayst know
 Time's thievish progress to eternity;
 Look what thy memory cannot contain,
 Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find 10
 Those children nursed, delivered from thy brain,
 To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
 These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
 Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

with black lines (63.13), as waste, containing nothing of value until they bear the impress of the youth's reflections on his own image.

- 11 'your own thoughts, born from your brain and nourished by further contemplation': the placing of nursed before delivered 'may have been prompted by Shakespeare's desire to stress the idea that what the mind gives it also receives' (Booth, 268).
- 12 a new acquaintance Reading the written version of his thoughts, he will encounter them afresh.
- 13 offices functions, duties: presumably refers, not just to writing and reading, but to the threefold stages of self-contemplation proposed in ll. 1-4, all of which entail looking.

- 14 will promote your moral improvement, and add to the value of your (note)book: a tritely predictable admonition; however, if the allusion is not to a blank notebook, but to the youth's book of his friend's sonnets, a more complex suggestion is made that the value of the book called Shakespeare's Sonnets derives, not from what the poet has written, but from the (written) response to it of the youth.

1 wear] Capell (Gildon); were Q 2 minutes] mynuits 3 The] Q, Ard!; These Capell 10 blanks] Capell; blacks Q 11 nursed] nurst delivered] deliuerd 14 enrich] inrich

- 78 Continuing the enlargement of poetic self-awareness initiated in 76, the speaker claims that his celebration of the youth as his (male) Muse has provoked many other writers to invoke him as their patron; he appeals to the young man to cherish his poems most, because his dependence on him is most absolute.
- 2 fair assistance suggests both favourable help as a patron, and the directly inspiring quality of the fair youth's beauty
- 3 alien The italicization and capitalization of this word in Q appears to underline the 'alienness', or otherness, of the rival writers. The word primarily suggests 'foreign' or 'immigrant' (OED 1a, 3a), but is here presumably figurative (OED 2). It might, however, suggest a pen employed, learnedly, in translating alien, i.e. non-English, writings.
got my use appropriated my custom (of invoking you as my Muse)
- 4 under . . . disperse distribute their poems under your patronage; dispersal could take the form of manuscript circulation or printing or both.
- 5-8 taught . . . majesty traces a fourfold process of amelioration, with two negatives posited and two forms of talent enhanced: the dumb sing; the ignorant are raised up; the learned are made more so; grace and dignity are enhanced.
- 5 taught . . . sing taught those previously dumb to sing high, or compose 'lofty' verses: could apply both to the original inspiration afforded by the youth to the poet, and to his subsequent inspiration of others. If 'Mr. W.H.' (Dedication, l. 3) is William Herbert, there could be an allusion to Captain Tobias Hume, The First Part of Ayres (1605), dedicated to William Herbert by a soldier who claims to lack eloquence, yet translates songs and composes airs.
- 7 suggests both the process of 'imping' feathers on to birds' wings in falconry, and the reinforcement of the goose quill which is the instrument of writing
- 9 compile compose: cf. 'Longaville / Did never sonnet for her sake compile', LLL 4.3.131-2; and OED 3.
- 10 Whose . . . thine The poems the speaker writes are wholly inspired by the addressee.
- 11 mend improve; cf. 103.9.
- 12 'Your graciousness (or gracefulness) adds lustre to manifestations of literary skill'; a further layer is added if the addressee is a nobleman who may at times be addressed as 'your grace', and/or consorts with other such graces, though this term is correctly applied only to those of ducal rank or above (OED grace 16b).
graced graced
- 13 thou art . . . art Cf. Sidney, AS, 64.14, 'Thou art my wit, and thou my virtue art', with a similar play on art = you are / art = literary skill.
- 14 The speaker is the least learned or lofty of all those who address the youth, but because of his primacy in invoking the youth he is elevated to the level of the most learned.

78

So oft have I invoked thee for my Muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb on high to sing, 5
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee: 10
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
But thou art all my art, and dost advance,
As high as learning, my rude ignorance.

- 79 Continuing his discussion of other poets who celebrate the fair youth, the speaker argues that the other writer needs no thanks, for the merit of his writing derives entirely from the merit of its subject. The strained logic of the poem resembles the chop-logic of Shakespeare's jesters when they seek to displace rival aspirants to favour.
- 2 (a) My poetry enjoyed the exclusive benefit of your patronage; (b) my writings alone encompassed the topic of your nobility and favour.
- 3 gracious numbers verses elevated by your grace are decayed suggests both that the poetry has lost its lustre because of the wider diffusion of the youth's favour, and that it is old and ailing (as in sick Muse, next line); also, possibly,
- that the numbers – numerals – of the sonnets themselves, post-70, bespeak decadence
- 4 give another place cede room to another Muse, or poet
- 5 thy lovely argument the beautiful subject-matter which is yourself
- 7 of thee about you, concerning you: chiasitic reversal of the phrase in the second foot of the succeeding line (thee of) enacts the notion of bestowing what is lent.
- 11 in thy cheek synecdoche for the beauty of the youth's whole form, as in 68.1
- afford supply, furnish; with a play on 'have the means, bear the expense', since the poet owes all his rhetorical wealth to his subject (OED 7, 3)
- 14 owes thee is obliged to furnish you with

- 80 Acknowledging the superiority of the 'rival poet', the speaker pleads for his generous patron at least to recognize the value of his love, as in 32.14. The contrast between himself and his rival is shown in terms of the contrast between the small, mobile ships used by the English at the time of the Spanish Armada and the larger, more impressive and more heavily armed Spanish galleons; cf. Armada, 236.
- 1 faint quail, lose heart (OED 1)
- 2 a better spirit suggests both a superior being and a more inspired writer, supported by a more powerful spirit than the sick Muse of 79.4 use may have some adverse connotations, suggesting 'exploit', or even 'consume', as well as 'cite'
- 4 To . . . tongue-tied suggests destructive competitiveness, as if the better spirit is as much concerned to silence his rival as to exalt his patron
- 5 wide . . . is which is as wide as the ocean: for the identification of a noble or royal person with the sea, cf. Luc 652, "Thou art", quoth she, "a sea, a sovereign king"; or Daniel's Delia (1592), 1.1-2: 'Unto the boundless Ocean of thy beautie / Runs this poore river, charg'd with streames of zeale.' See also AC 3.12.7-9.
- 7 saucy bark small boat which is presumptuous, insolent towards a superior
- 8 broad main wide expanse of water; cf. 64.7 and n.
wilfully reinforces saucy, suggesting a capricious, thoughtless venturousness
- 9 Being a lightweight vessel, the speaker needs only minimal support from his ocean-like patron.
- 10 soundless deep beyond 'sounding'; but also 'noiseless' ride often used of ships moving on water; cf. 137.6; also R3 4.4.434; Per 4.4.31, 5.1.18.
- 11 I . . . boat I am (only) a worthless vessel, not deserving of rescue or support.
- 12 tall building lofty structure, like that of the most advanced galleons of the period pride self-assurance; splendour
- 14 my love . . . decay primarily, 'I was destroyed because of my devotion to you'; but secondarily, if my love is taken to refer to the object rather than the emotion, 'the person I love let me down'. This, it would then be implied, was his worst affliction.

- 81 After 'fourscore', a figure associated with extreme old age (cf. Psalm 90.10; KL 4.7.61), as after 'threescore and ten', the speaker anticipates his death, but this time includes the possibility that his friend may pre-decease him. When the poet dies, he will be quickly forgotten; but when the youth dies, he will continue to live as the subject-matter of the poet's verse. The paradoxical claim that Son will be remembered for its subject-matter (the fair youth), not for its author, is here taken to its furthest extremes.
- 1-2 Or . . . Or whether . . . or
- 1 your . . . make to pen your epitaph; to survive as your living epitaph
- 3 your memory the memory of you
- 4 in me in my case
- each part includes the sense 'each gift', suggesting a reference to the speaker's poetic skill (cf. OED part 12)
- 5 from hence henceforward; from here, the sonnet sequence we are in the middle of reading
- 6 to . . . world to the whole of posterity; to all outward appearance
- 7 a common grave an ordinary grave; a grave shared with others. The fact that Shakespeare was buried in an honorific position in the chancel of Holy Trinity Church, Stratford, is not, as has been suggested, especially ironical (Brown and Feavor, 27 ff.), for the contrast here is between any physical form of burial and the living monument of verse.
- 8 entombed entombèd
- lie At first it seems that lie, rather than 'live', has been chosen to rhyme with die; but the oddity of 'lying' may be deliberate, especially given the plays with lies and lying in later sonnets, such as 138. The youth will die in men's eyes, rather than live in them, for he will be seen as in a recumbent effigy; and he may also be falsely represented in them.
- 9 my gentle verse The suggestion may be that the noble subject makes the (low-born) poet's verse gentle in the sense of 'gentlemanly'; also there is an implied contrast between the earthy grave that entombs the poet and the gentle, or tender, solicitous, containment of the youth in language (OED gentle 1a, 6, 8). Jonson famously applied the epithet to Shakespeare himself in the poem 'To the Reader facing the title-page of the First Folio': 'This Figure, that thou here seest put, / It was for gentle Shakespeare cut' (Jonson, 8.390).
- 11 tongues to be tongues of people yet to be, not yet born
- rehearse repeat, re-enact
- 12 all . . . world all those at present alive; cf. 'I will chide no breather in the world but myself', AYL 3.2.297.
- 13 such . . . pen such power or efficacy is in my writing; with a subsidiary suggestion that the writing celebrates moral virtue. The first reading is hard to square with the assertion in l. 4 that the pen's wielder will be instantly forgotten.
- 14 breath suggests both the breath that distinguishes a living body from a dead one, and the 'breath' of rumour or fame; for the second sense, cf. TC 1.3.244.

81

Or I shall live, your epitaph to make;
 Or you survive, when I in earth am rotten;
 From hence your memory death cannot take,
 Although in me each part will be forgotten.
 Your name from hence immortal life shall have, 5
 Though I, once gone, to all the world must die;
 The earth can yield me but a common grave,
 When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
 Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
 Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read, 10
 And tongues to be your being shall rehearse,
 When all the breathers of this world are dead.
 You still shall live, such virtue hath my pen,
 Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

1 epitaph] Epitaph 5 I, once gone,] I (once gone) 8 entomb'd] intomb'd 13 live, such . . . pen,] live (such . . . Pen)

- 82 At first acknowledging that the youth is not obliged to read one poet only, the speaker suggests that the more elaborate forms of verse used by others may better express the young man's excellence; but then claims that, since he needs no flattery, he is best celebrated in his own plain style.
- 1 grant concede, acknowledge
- 2 attaint disgrace, moral infection; cf. Luc 825.
- o'erlook examine, peruse; cf. TGV 1.2.50.
- 3 the words used by writers in dedicating their works to you; also the works themselves
- 4 Of . . . subject concerning their excellent subject-matter, yourself; cf. lovely argument, 79.5.
- blessing which blesses, bestows benefits on
- 5 hue external appearance, colour (OED 1, 2, 3a); cf. 20.7 and n.
- 6 a . . . praise 'an area extending beyond my capacity to praise it in verse': for limit as 'extensive region', cf. 44.4 and n.
- 8 some newer creation (with a suggestion, in stamp, of a newly printed book) which is the product of recent, improved times: time-bettering days suggests 'times or fashions which improve on the old days'. But as Booth (280-1) suggests, there may be a touch of irony because of the similarity of the phrase to 'time-serving' or 'time-pleasing'. If compound epithets are thought of as the distinguishing mark of more fashionable poets (cf. compounds strange, 76.4 and n.), there is a touch of insouciant display in the use of such an epithet to describe their activities.
- 9 do so love and accordingly, or in these terms, you love the dedicated words of the other poets; or, you have my permission to love in this way.
- 10 strained touches 'artificial devices or conceits'; with suggestions of a painter's brush-strokes, in anticipation of painting in l. 1 of the following sonnet
- strained strained
- 11 sympathized '(presented in) a perfectly matching or corresponding manner' (OED sympathize 3b); cf. 'True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd / When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd' (Luc 1113).
- 13 gross painting excessive, inappropriately profuse rhetoric, with suggestions of flattery
- 14 Where . . . blood to elevate individuals who lack beauty; the youth's cheek is frequently used as a synecdoche for the beauty of his entire body: cf. 67.5, 68.1, 79.1, 99.4.
- in . . . abused with reference to you, such rhetoric is misapplied; your taste for it is inappropriate

82

I grant thou wert not married to my Muse,
And therefore mayst without attaint o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue, 5
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise,
And therefore art enforced to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days,
And do so love; yet when they have devised
What strained touches rhetoric can lend, 10
Thou, truly fair, wert truly sympathized
In true plain words, by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better used
Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abused.

5 hue| hew 8 time-bettering| time bettering days,| dayes 9 devised| deuisse 10 rhetoric| Rhethorick
11 sympathized| simpathizde 12 true-telling| true telling 13 used| vs'd 14 abused| abus'd

- 83 Following immediately on the end of the previous sonnet, the speaker claims that he has refrained from applying rhetorical praises to the youth's beauty, but should not be reproached for this, since the young man's living excellence transcends any words used of it.
- 1–2 painting . . . painting primarily suggests 'falsely profuse rhetoric', as in the gross painting of 82.13; but may also denote, more broadly, 'description or delineation'
- 2 fair fairness, beauty; cf. 18.7; LLL 4.1.17.
set applied
- 3 or . . . found Presumably the speaker questions his previous belief that the youth needed no flattery because he has now been rebuked for his silence, as in l. 9.
- 4 'the sterile or worthless benefit that a writer has to offer': debt accommodates both an acknowledgement that the present poet ought to have 'painted' his friend, and a sense that such an activity would have been merely dutiful, not an expression of true feeling.
- 5 slept . . . report have been ineffectual, inactive in describing you (cf. OED sleep 4a)
- 6 That so that
- 7 a modern quill an ordinary, commonplace style of writing; cf. 'wise saws and modern instances', AYL 2.7.156. 'Trite', rather than 'recent or contemporary', is Shakespeare's usual application of modern; cf. OED 4.
- 7–8 too . . . of worth The inevitability of literary praise falling short of the youth's excellence is reinforced by the syntactical brevity of the clause, in which we would expect 'short of . . .'.
- 8 grow suggests not only that written descriptions of the youth's excellence fall short, but that the excellence itself may be burgeoning or increasing, rendering description obsolete
- 9 impute consider, regard
- 10 Which my silence: behind ll. 9–10 may lie a recollection of Sidney's AS, 54.13–14: 'Dumb swans, not chattering pies, do lovers prove; / They love indeed, who quake to say they love.'
- 11 Since I am silent, I do not misrepresent or damage your beauty.
- 12 When whereas others . . . tomb In seeking to evoke your living beauty in verse, the other poets kill it. The speaker now assigns to other writers the role he attributed to his own verse in 17.3, where he called it but . . . a tomb. Cf. Cor 4.7.51–3.
- 14 both your poets does not necessarily indicate that there is only one 'rival poet', for Shakespeare sometimes uses both to govern three or more objects, as in VA 747 and IH6 5.5.107 (and cf. OED B 1b); however, in combination with 'one of your fair eyes' it implies that even two poets per eye would not be enough.

83

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set;
I found (or thought I found) you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt;
And therefore have I slept in your report, 5
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb; 10
For I impair not beauty, being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
 There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
 Than both your poets can in praise devise.

- 84 This sonnet continues the discussion of whether the youth is best praised in the speaker's supposedly plain terms, or the elaborate rhetoric of others. Though he makes a case for plain style, he undercuts it with an allegation that the youth himself has a weakness for flattery.
- 1-4 Booth (284) calls these four lines 'a stylistic palimpsest'. However, if Malone's insertion of a question mark after most is accepted, the remaining three and a half lines yield a reasonably coherent sense: 'Which (of the poets competing to praise the fair youth) can say more than that you are uniquely and splendidly yourself, and that within you alone the fountain and archetype (store) of worth is contained (immured) which alone offers a simile which can match you in excellence? That is, you can be compared only with yourself: any other comparison fails to do you justice.' There may be a reminiscence of Sidney, AS, 35.1-2: 'What may words say, / Where truth itself must speak like flattery?' Also, the phrase rich praise could allude covertly to Sidney's many plays on 'rich' in AS, as in 35.11.
- 3 immured immurèd
- 5 the play on pen and penury reinforces an allusion to the commonplace idea that 'learning and poverty will ever kiss' (cf. Marlowe, Hero and Leander, 469: Poems, 26). However, the primary reference here is to poverty of invention, as in 103.1.
- 8 so in so doing
dignifies his story elevates his writing, makes it worthy of you
- 9 Cf. Sidney, AS, 3.12-14: 'in Stella's face I read / What love and beauty be; then all my deed / But copying is, what in her nature writes'.
- 10 clear lucid; beautiful (OED 8, 3c)
- 11 counterpart 'A person or thing so answering to another as to appear a duplicate or exact copy of it' (OED 3; no example offered before 1680): apparently used here as a synonym of 'counterfeit'
- fame his wit make his poetic skill famous
- 12 admired admirèd
- 13 You Presumably the addressee here, as in ll. 2-4, is the fair youth, rather than the poet who celebrates him.
- 14 fond on foolishly eager for, desirous of makes . . . worse The desire you have for praise is a weakness which undermines the praise you receive; or, because of your weakness for being praised, the praise you receive is specious, flattering rhetoric, not the plain statement 'That you are you' recommended by the present poet. The conclusion is strongly reminiscent of KL 1.1.36-106, in which Cordelia, who loves her father most, is least able to gratify his desire for flattery.

84

Who is it that says most? Which can say more,
 Than this rich praise: that you alone are you,
 In whose confine immured is the store
 Which should example where your equal grew?
 Lean penury within that pen doth dwell 5
 That to his subject lends not some small glory;
 But he that writes of you, if he can tell
 That you are you, so dignifies his story.
 Let him but copy what in you is writ,
 Not making worse what nature made so clear, 10
 And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
 Making his style admired everywhere.
 You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
 Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

1 most?] Malone; most, Q 5 pen] Pen 11 counterpart] counter-part

- 85 Still playing the Cordelia role, the speaker concedes and confirms the glorious praises voiced by a rival poet, but claims that his own silent, internalized devotion merits equal favour. There are further echoes here of Sidney's AS, especially of 54, with the same paradox that the reader is asked to accept a carefully elaborated sonnet as an image of inarticulate love.
- 1 in . . . still out of courtesy maintains her silence: though the primary suggestion of in manners is that the speaker's Muse is showing deference to the rival poet, there may also be an implication that the other's elaborate language is not 'mannerly'; and still suggests not only 'in silence' but 'in continuance'.
- 2 comments . . . praise expositions of or commentaries on your praiseworthy qualities, possibly in the form of illustrative matter rather than the central text (cf. OED comment 1, 3). compiled collected into a volume or treatise (OED 1)
- 3 Reserve your character retain, preserve your appearance, demeanour: for this sense of reserve, cf. Son 32.7, MM 5.1.467; for character cf. MM 1.2.151. Pooler's suggested emendation of Q's 'their' to thy (Ard¹) has been rejected in favour of 'your' (RP). golden quill suggests a beautifully elaborate, 'aureate', style of writing
- 4 precious phrase following on from golden, denoting language of the utmost value. The adverse literary application of the word, following Fr. précieux, as 'affected, over-refined', was not current until the mid seventeenth century.
- 5 other others
- 6 unlettered clerk The function of the parish clerk was to lead the congregation in responses and 'amens': cf. R2 4.1.172-3.
- 7 hymn song of praise, perhaps with a pun on 'him' = 'every Tom, Dick or Harry'
- that . . . affords which that talented genius lends to you; or, which is provided by poetic ingenuity interpreted more broadly. The following sonnet, with its reference to the spirit of a single writer, would support the first reading.
- 8 well-refined well-refined: in the sophisticated style produced by a writer whose style is successfully purified (cf. OED refine 1a and b; 3a); there may also be a suggestion that the writer's language has benefited from immersion in such a well of inspiration as the youth.
- 10 most utmost
- 12 holds . . . before maintains first position in the hierarchy (of those who love you)
- 13 respect love; esteem; cf. TGV 1.2.131.
- 14 speaking in effect which speak in external action or in truth, rather than in mere breath of words, which is here treated as insubstantial and suspect: cf. OED effect 8.

85

My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still,
 While comments of your praise richly compiled
 Reserve your character with golden quill,
 And precious phrase by all the Muses filed;
 I think good thoughts, whilst other write good words, 5
 And like unlettered clerk still cry 'Amen'
 To every hymn that able spirit affords
 In polished form of well-refined pen.
 Hearing you praised, I say, 'Tis so, 'tis true',
 And to the most of praise add something more; 10
 But that is in my thought, whose love to you (Though words come hindmost) holds his rank before;
 Then others for the breath of words respect,
 Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

2 compiled] compil'd, 3 your] this edn. (RP) their Q thy Ard^l conj. character] Character 4 filed] fil'd 7 hymn] Himne 8 well-refined] well refined 9 praised] prais'd 10 something] some-thing 12 hindmost] hind-most

- 86 Undaunted by the splendour of his rival's verses, the speaker quails only at his appropriation of the young man's favour. The imagery of 80, in which the addressee offers an ocean of favour to those who are able to navigate it, is here resumed; and both sonnets are paralleled in Thomas Fuller's account of Shakespeare and Jonson in his Worthies of England (1662), 126: 'Many were the wit-combates betwixt him and Ben Jonson, which two I behold like a Spanish great Gallion, and an English man of War; Master Johnson (like the former) was built far higher in Learning; Solid, but Slow in his performances. Shake-spear with the English-man of War, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his Wit and Invention.' Possibly Fuller alludes to these sonnets, and believed Jonson to be the chief 'rival poet'; or believed that some of Shakespeare's and Jonson's published writings (perhaps specifically the latter's Epigrammes (1616) and the former's Sonnets) reflect such an emulation. The 'wit-combats' need not have been oral, as Schoenbaum (Lives, 57) and others have assumed.
- 1 the . . . verse like the tall building and goodly pride attributed to the rival poet's vessel in 80.12, suggests a mighty ocean-going galleon, figuring an ambitious and perhaps highly elaborated form of verse
 - 2 Bound . . . prize The image is of a privateer setting out for the Indies or elsewhere in the hope of capturing valuable booty.
 - 3 As in the final line of the preceding sonnet, the speaker claims to be unable to voice his thoughts of love: they are ready for utterance (ripe), but remain buried (in-hearsed) in his brain because he is intimidated by his rival.
 - 4 causing them to die even before they were born (uttered): the image of the brain as a womb, fairly common, also recalls Thorpe's identification of Mr. W.H. as the sonnets' only begetter (Dedication, ll. 1–3).
 - 5 spirit intellectual power, energy (Glossary, 2, 1) spirits suggests supernatural beings, such as the spirits of dead writers; George Chapman, for instance, was inspired by Musaeus and Christopher Marlowe to complete the latter's Hero and Leander (1598) (cf. 3.123–198); and by Homer to translate the Seaven Bookes of the Iliades (1598), expanded into a twelve-book version in the winter of 1608/9. But the word could simply refer to the rival poet's own powerful spirits, or reserves of creative energy.
 - 6 mortal pitch height attainable by mere mortals struck me dead stunned me into (dead) silence (OED strike 46b): there seems to be a parallel to Touchstone's remark, sometimes taken as an allusion to the death of Marlowe, 'When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child, understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room' (AYL 3.3.9–14).
 - 7 his . . . night once taken as an allusion to the 'School of Night', a supposed coterie whose members included Raleigh, Chapman, Harriot and others (cf. Bradbrook): compeers = companions, associates. The implication is that the rival poet is dependent on the promptings of others for his creations.
 - 8 astonished astonished: stunned, struck dumb with amazement (cf. Luc 1730)
 - 9 that . . . ghost that benign and friendly guardian spirit (cf. OED familiar 2d, familiar angel). The phrase seems to carry an allusion to some well-known relationship between a poet and his Muse or inspiring genius, such as Chapman's with the spirit of Homer.
 - 10 gulls . . . intelligence tricks him with (false) communications

86

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
 Bound for the prize of all-too-precious you,
 That did my ripe thoughts in my brain in-herse,
 Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
 Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write 5
 Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
 No, neither he, nor his compeers by night,
 Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
 He, nor that affable familiar ghost
 Which nightly gulls him with intelligence, 10
 As victors of my silence cannot boast;
 I was not sick of any fear from thence.
 But when your countenance filled up his line,
 Then lacked I matter, that enfeebled mine.

11 victors . . . boast (Those spirits) cannot claim to have been the cause of my (poetic) silence.

12 sick of sick because of; cf. TN 1.5.97, 'O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio'.

13 your countenance your face; your favourable regard: the word has strong biblical associations with divine favour, as in Numbers, 6.26, 'The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.'

filled up suggests both a patronage which reinforces and strengthens the rival poet's great verse, and, resuming the sailing imagery of ll. 1–2, a favourable breath which 'fills' the sails of his project, as in Prospero's appeal for 'Gentle breath' (Tem Epilogue 11–12). Though Q's spelling 'fild' permits the reading 'filed' as polished, refined, as in l. 4 of the preceding sonnet, the full sail of l. 1 makes filled more probable; and a countenance, viewed as emitting light, warmth and breath, cannot readily be imagined as 'filing'.

14 matter substance, subject-matter (OED 11a)

2 all-too-precious] (all to precious) 3 in-herse] inhearce 7 compeers] compiers 13 countenance] countinance filled] fild 14 lacked] lackt enfeebled] infeebled

- 87 Using legal and financial imagery, the speaker relinquishes his claim to the young man, which was based on a misjudgement or misprision, the youth having underestimated his own value and overestimated that of the speaker. The use of feminine rhymes in every line except 2 and 4 draws attention to the sonnet as unusual in form (cf. 20 and headnote), perhaps to mark a new phase in the sequence: the rival poet is forgotten, but all is not well with the friends. There may be a structural allusion to Sidney's AS 87, which, following four songs, initiates a phase of sonnets on separation and misunderstanding.
- 1 too . . . possessing a paradox: on an emotional level = 'I love you so much that I cannot keep you', undercut by the financial sense, = 'you are too valuable for someone of my lowly status'
- 2 estimate value, reputation (Glossary, 1 and 2); suggests both 'you know your true value' and 'you know how you are esteemed by others'
- 3 charter of thy worth privilege you enjoy because of your merit; cf. the similar application of charter in 58.9. gives thee releasing entitles you to free yourself (from me)
- 4 'all that binds me finds its limit or terms of expiry in you': for determinate in this sense, cf. OED A. In a sonnet where every other rhyme is disyllabic the use of a monosyllabic rhyme here reinforces a sense of severance.
- 6 riches suggesting 'a person of immense value because so much loved', cf. 'The riches of the ship is come on shore', Oth 2.1.83.
- 7 The . . . gift the warrant for your bestowing on me the beautiful gift of yourself wanting lacking; there is probably no play on 'desiring', as Booth suggests, since this sense is not recorded until the early eighteenth century (cf. OED wanting; want 5a).
- 8 patent privilege, right of ownership
swerving turning, deviating; here a slightly strained application, the word being partly dictated by the rhyme, to suggest that the speaker's rights of ownership have lapsed or become void. The word is elsewhere associated with moral deviance: cf. HS 2.2.233; AC 3.11.50.
- 10 else probably governs me rather than mistaking, the larger sense being 'you gave yourself to me either in ignorance of your own worth, or else in ignorance of my lack of worth' mistaking misapprehending, misjudging; cf. AYL 1.3.64.
- 11 upon misprision growing coming into existence as the result of a false estimate
- 13 had thee possessed you, possibly with sexual undertones; cf. 129.10 (and OED have 14c).
flatter deceive, beguile with pleasing illusion (OED 6, 7a and 7b): cf. 'For now reviving joy bids her rejoice, / And flatters her it is Adonis' voice' (VA 976-7).
- 14 in . . . king primarily suggests that the speaker has enjoyed intense happiness: cf. 'As merry (happy) as a king' (Tilley, K54). Q's capitalized 'King' could alternatively suggest that he has enjoyed his presence in a way analogous to James I; or king could apply to the addressee, elevated to kingly status, or the status of a specific King, only by the speaker's imagination; cf. R2 5.1.1-9.
waking The internal rhyme on a king, which also picks up mistaking . . . making from ll. 10 and 12, suggests a quibble. Conceivably the elevenfold repetition of the particle -ing hints at 'ingle', = a boy favourite, a catamite (OED); some such innuendo may also be underlined by the 'feminine' rhymes and the word had in the previous line. There may additionally or alternatively be an allusion to Shakespeare having acted kings; cf. John Davies of Hereford, Epigram 159, 'To our English Terence Mr. Will: Shake-speare': 'Some say (good Will) which I, in sport, do sing, /

- 88 Continuing the theme of severance between the friends deriving from their disparity in value, the poet promises to endorse the young man's rejection of him by enumerating his own deficiencies, thus doubly affirming the young man's integrity.
- 1 disposed . . . light in a mood to think little of me
- 2 and look on my merits with a scornful eye, or cause others to do so
- 4 demonstrate your integrity or truthfulness, despite your false aspersions on my merit
- 6 a story a narration, a recital
- 7 attainted tainted, morally compromised; (rightfully) accused, as if in a court of law
- 8 That so that, with the consequence that losing me destroying my reputation;
- cf. OED lose 1b, and example from KL 1.1.236: 'Such a tongue / That I am glad I have not, though not to have it / Hath lost me in your liking'.
- 11–12 Cf. KL 2.4.302–6: 'to wilful men / The injuries that they themselves procure / Must be their schoolmasters'.
- 12 In bestowing benefit on you, (this procedure) will doubly benefit me (in reinforcing your merits and so making you even more lovable).
- 13 so in such a manner, so utterly
- 14 In order to do the right thing by you, to affirm your right to be loved and admired, I will take all faults on to myself: recalls the self-abnegating denial of Shakespeare's heroines, such as Desdemona's 'Nobody, I myself, farewell' (Oth 5.2.125), or Cordelia's 'No cause, no cause' (KL 4.7.75).

88

When thou shalt be disposed to set me light
 And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
 Upon thy side, against myself, I'll fight,
 And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn:
 With mine own weakness being best acquainted, 5
 Upon thy part I can set down a story
 Of faults concealed, wherein I am attained,
 That thou, in losing me, shall win much glory;
 And I by this will be a gainer too,
 For bending all my loving thoughts on thee, 10
 The injuries that to myself I do,
 Doing thee vantage, double vantage me:
 Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
 That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

1 disposed] dispoed Q: dispos'd Benson 7 concealed] conceald 8 losing] loosing 12 me:] me.

- 89 Continuing from the end of the previous sonnet, the speaker expands further on his willingness to assume the faults of which he is accused, and to be excluded therefore from the young man's company.
- 1 Say that if you claim that
- 2 comment enlarge, expatiate; or meditate, ponder (OED 2, 5); cf. 15.4.
- 3 Taken literally, this is evidence against, rather than for, Shakespeare's being lame, since it suggests that if charged with lameness he will feign it; however, as Booth suggests (293), the reference could equally well be to 'lame' verses, with defective 'feet'.
- 4 reasons statements, assertions; grounds for forsaking me (Glossary, 1, 2)
- 6 The line is rather obscure: probably, 'to find a formal cause for your desire to leave me'; 'by setting out the manner in which you would like me to change (for the better)'; or, 'to make the change which you want to see in me attractive'; cf. MND 1.1.232-3. desired desired.
- 7 knowing thy will knowing your determination to cast me off; with perhaps a secondary suggestion of 'knowing your Will[iam Shakespeare], myself'
- 8 I will suppress my familiarity with you and behave as if I do not know you: strange = distant or cold in demeanour (OED 11; and cf. TGV 1.2.103).
- 9 thy walks the places where you walk; cf. JC 3.2.252.
- in my tongue i.e. I shall not speak of you.
- 10 beloved beloved
- 11 profane perhaps used in its root Lat. sense, 'standing outside a sacred place or temple'; also suggests, more broadly, 'unacceptable in good company', as in Henry V's dismissal of Falstaff as 'so surfeit-swelled, so old and so profane', 2H4 5.5.54. The implication in the next line that he may unwisely speak 'of our old acquaintance' also recalls Falstaff.
- 12 haply possibly, or by chance or 'hap'; there may be some ironical sense also of '(un)happily'.
- 13 vow debate determine to engage in conflict

- 90 Following on from the end of the previous sonnet, the speaker urges his friend, if he must reject him, to do so now, while his fortunes are at a low ebb, so that his other misfortunes can dwindle in comparison to this overwhelming one.
- 1 Then in that case (OED 4a); but with some sense also of a temporal reference, picking up the When of 88.1: 'When (and if) you feel like repudiating me . . . let the time be now.'
- 2 bent . . . cross determined to frustrate everything I do. This sounds like a specific personal reference, but in default of external evidence we cannot hope to connect it with documented reverses.
- 3 bow give in, submit to the crushing blows of fortune
- 4 drop . . . after-loss descend on me with an additional blow after I have already received others: it has been thought that drop in might be a technical term from sport or warfare, but no convincing analogy has been found. The only faint parallel elsewhere in Shakespeare is 'Certain friends that are both his and mine / Whose loves I may not drop', Mac 3.1.122.
- 5 this sorrow the sorrow of being spurned by you
- 6 elliptical military metaphor: = bring up the rear in assailing an opponent who is, to his grief, already defeated
- 7 do not redouble my miseries by making worse follow bad: resumes the meteorological imagery of 33-4, in which the young man's favourable regard is equated with sunshine, his neglect, treachery or unkindness with storm and rain.
- 8 military again: = to prolong the defeat of me which you intend
- 9 do . . . last do not be the last to leave me: implies that the other misfortunes alluded to in l. 2 also take the form of rejections by friends
- 10 petty griefs minor injuries
- 11 taste experience
- 13 strains varieties, levels; or perhaps (musical) sounds (OED 9a, b; 13) seem woe seem (truly) woeful, grievous
- 14 so so grievous: since 'O' was used to represent the sound of a groan (cf. KL (First Quarto) 5.3.308; R3 3.3.90), the thrice-repeated 'O' sounds in woe . . . woe . . . so mimic redoubled grief.

90

Then hate me when thou wilt, if ever, now,
 Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
 Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
 And do not drop in for an after-loss.
 Ah, do not, when my heart hath 'scaped this sorrow, 5
 Come in the rearward of a conquered woe;
 Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
 To linger out a purposed overthrow.
 If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
 When other petty griefs have done their spite; 10
 But in the onset come, so shall I taste
 At first the very worst of fortune's might;
 And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
 Compared with loss of thee, will not seem so.

4 after-loss] after losse 5 'scaped] scapte 6 conquered] conquerd 8 purposed] purposd 10 spite] spight 11 shall] Benson; stall Q 14 Compared] Compar'd

- 91 The poet spurns the material blessings in which others delight, declaring that all his pleasure is invested in his friend, who therefore has it in his power utterly to deprive him of happiness. Correlatio is employed, more subtly than in 77, in the enumeration and recapitulation of blessings.
- 1-4 'Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the Lord our God' (Psalm 20.7).
- 1 glory in boast of; cf. 'Of such an one will I glory, yet of my selfe I will not glory, but in mine infirmities' (2 Corinthians, 12.5).
- 3 new-fangled ill fashionable but absurd: a conventional dismissal of the impracticality of modish dress; cf. KL 2.4.270-2.
- 4 horse plural or collective
- 5 humour temperament, individual bent
- his its
- adjunct joined, associated
- 7 particulars personal interests, concerns (Glossary, 2); itemized matters
- 8 better improve on, excel
- 9-11 high . . . horses recapitulates the eight worldly benefits enumerated in ll. 1-4, but reduces them to five
- 9 better Q's 'bitter' may be an aural spelling.
- 10 garments' cost expensive splendour of raiment; cf. rich proud cost in 64.2 (OED cost 4).
- 12 of . . . boast I brag of pleasures excelling those of all (other) men.
- 13-14 a variant on the couplet of 64: the speaker's sole source of misery lies in his awareness of the possibility of loss, so that instead of being happier than all men, as in l. 12, he is in danger of being, of all men, most wretched.

91

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
 Some in their wealth, some in their bodies' force,
 Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill,
 Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse,
 And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure, 5
 Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
 But these particulars are not my measure;
 All these I better in one general best.
 Thy love is better than high birth to me,
 Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost, 10
 Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
 And having thee, of all men's pride I boast –
 Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
 All this away, and me most wretched make.

4 hawks] Hawkes hounds] Hounds horse] Horse 9 better] Benson; bitter Q 11 hawks] Hawkes horses] Horses

- 92 Following from the end of the preceding sonnet, the speaker reassures himself with the thought that if the friend withdraws his love, he will immediately die, and so become immune to further injury from the young man's whims; however, this thought does not protect him against injuries of which he is not (yet) aware.
- 1 steal thyself away 'steal away' = to depart or withdraw secretly (OED 9a); with a secondary suggestion here that the young man removes from the speaker that which he has just described as Richer than wealth (91.10)
- 2 term of life legal phrase applying to marriage and/or property rights; the next line makes it clear that 'my life' is understood.
- assured mine firmly assigned to me (OED assure 3): another legal term
- assured assurèd
- 3 stay remain, inhere
- 4 depends upon is governed by, is contingent upon
- that . . . thine that love that you bestow on me
- 5-6 the . . . them Since the preceding sonnet has identified the withdrawal of the young man's love as the worst injury the speaker can experience, it is hard to know how to interpret the least of them; but perhaps the suggestion is,
- 'I need not fear the ultimate injury, the complete withdrawal of your love, since I shall die at the first hint of it.'
- 7 a better state a happier condition or place; here, by implication, 'a state beyond mortal life'. Though the speaker's natural life depends on the youth's favour, his heritage is heaven, which transcends it.
- 8 humour mood, inclination (OED 5, 6)
- 9 vex . . . mind grieve me with (your) variable moods or intentions
- 10 revolt change of sides or opinion (OED 1c, with this example)
- 11-12 The threefold happy appears to cancel the double wretched at the end of the preceding sonnet, suggesting both 'joyful', 'fortunate', and (in the third occurrence) 'contented'.
- 11 title right of possession, entitlement
- 13 blessed fair beneficently beautiful; happily equitable
- blessed blessèd
- fears no blot is not at risk of pollution or diminution
- 14 Thou . . . false you may be false to me in the future; you may already be false to me now
- yet nevertheless; for the time being
- not Malone follows this with a colon, suggesting an introduction to 93.

92

But do thy worst to steal thyself away;
For term of life thou art assured mine,
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs, 5
When in the least of them my life hath end;
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend.
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie. 10
O what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
 But what's so blessed fair that fears no blot?
 Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

14 not.] not: Malone

- 93 The speaker develops from the last line of the previous sonnet the notion of being happily deceived: the young man's appearance suggests that he is incapable of being anything but loving, which makes the deceptiveness of his appearance – if it is deceptive – the more disastrous.
- 1 So in this manner (as defined in the preceding sonnet)
supposing believing
- 2 Like . . . husband the kind of husband Othello would like to have been, Oth 3.3.351–3.
deceived deceived
- 3 May . . . me may still appear to me as the quintessence of love; may still seem expressive of love towards me altered new newly altered; the beloved's face here seems like that of the changing moon.
- 4 Cf. 61.14.
- 7 many's looks the appearance of many other men, or their facial expression the . . . history the record of the heart's falsity
- 8 moods (expressions of) varying states of mind or feeling, with particular connotations of anger; cf. TGV 4.1.51, H5 4.7.38.
wrinkles strange odd contortions of the facial muscles: see OED wrinkle 3a; its associations are with displeasure rather than age.
- 11 workings Cf. Othello's comment on Iago's words: 'They are close denotements, working from the heart', Oth 3.3.127.
- 12 thence from the heart, a source of authentic impulse tell speak of; enumerate
- 13 Eve's apple a fruit which, like that eaten by Eve in Genesis, 3.6, looks attractive but has evil effects when consumed; cf. the image applied by Antonio to Shylock, 'a goodly apple rotten at the heart', MV 1.3.102.
- 14 virtue suggests both moral virtue and the medicinal 'virtue' residing in a plant or fruit; cf. 54.9 and n.
answer . . . show does not correspond with your appearance: both here and in the next sonnet Shakespeare draws on the Neoplatonic idea that physical beauty is, or should be, a trustworthy index of inner virtue; cf. 'beautie commeth of God . . . Whereupon doth very seldom an ill soule dwell in a beautifull bodie. And therefore is the outwarde beautie a true signe of the inward goodnesse, and in bodies this comelines is imprinted more and lesse (as it were) for a marke of the soule, whereby she is outwardly knowne' (Castiglione, 360).

93

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though altered new,
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place;
For there can live no hatred in thine eye, 5
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks, the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange;
But heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell; 10
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show.

- 94 Picking up from the conclusion of the previous sonnet the notion that the youth's beauty ought to be an index of sincere goodness, the speaker develops the idea that the gift of beauty carries with it an obligation to behave virtuously. Those who, despite their beautiful appearance, behave viciously deserve more obloquy than those whose appearance marks them out as weeds.
- 1 power to hurt because of their beauty: cf. 'To be able to do harm, and not to do it, is noble' (Tilley, H170).
 - 2 the . . . show Presumably the reference is to sexual activity, which is 'shown' in them in the sense that thoughts of it are provoked by their attractive appearance.
 - 3 as stone cold and unmoved, as in 'as still as a stone' (OED stone 3a, b); or powerfully attractive, like lodestone (OED 8b)
 - 4 Unmoved unmoved
 - 5 rightly as of right; truly, properly
 - 6 husband preserve, administer with thrift and prudence (OED 2a) from expense from (unnecessary) expenditure, with a play on refraining from the emission of semen; cf. 129.1–2 and n.; also 6.3–4 and n., 20.14 and n.
 - 7–8 lords . . . stewards Those who are self-controlled are rightful possessors of their natural beauty; those who are not merely administer it for the benefit of others, like stewards.
 - 9 summer's flower the flower that pertains to the summer, with connotations of the fragile beauty of (female) sexuality: cf. 'Women are as roses, whose fair flower / Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour' (TN 2.4.37–8). Both here and in l. 11 flower is linked by rhyme and position to power in l. 1.
to the summer as perceived by the (personified) summer; with regard to the summer
 - 10 Contrast the undesirable canker blooms of 54, which Die to themselves, and so lack value; cf. also 'Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse', VA 166. The phrase it only suggests both '(though) it lives and dies alone' and '(though) it does no more than live and die'. There seems to be a parallel with Romans, 14.7–8: 'For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord'.
 - 11 base infection degrading pollution or disease: cf. 67, 'Ah, wherefore with infection should he live', where also there was an identification of the youth with a flower (rose) of archetypal splendour.
 - 12 outbraves outdoes in beauty or splendour of array (OED 2b): cf. John Gerard, Herball (1597), Preface, of King Solomon, 'The Lillies of the field out-braved him'; there is probably a reference to the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew, 6.28–9: 'consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these'. The lordly youth's dignity, like that of Solomon, can be outdone by a simple flower.
 - 13 sweetest . . . deeds conflates two proverbs: 'What is sweet in the mouth is oft sour in the maw', Tilley, M1265, and cf. R2 1.3.235, Luc 699; and 'The corruption of the best is the worst' (Tilley, C668)
 - 14 Though there may be an allusion to the proverb 'The lily is fair in show but foul in smell' (Tilley, L297), the primary suggestion is that, untainted, the lily would smell sweet; a foul smell is worse in it than in a mere weed because of the expectations of virtue (moral and botanical) activated by its beauty. The line occurs in identical form in the anonymous The Reign of King Edward the Third (1596), 2.1.41, (Edward III, 79). Whether or not Shakespeare had a hand in the play, verbal parallels leave no doubt that he was familiar with it and with the application of the line to the lustful Edward, who tries to use his high rank

94

They that have power to hurt, and will do none,
 That do not do the thing they most do show,
 Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
 Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow:
 They rightly do inherit heaven's graces, 5
 And husband nature's riches from expense;
 They are the lords and owners of their faces,
 Others, but stewards of their excellence.
 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
 Though to itself it only live and die, 10
 But if that flower with base infection meet,
 The basest weed outbraves his dignity:
 For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
 Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

to compel the Countess of Salisbury to yield to him. (Cf. Proudfoot, 181).
 The line occurs in the Countess's sententious rejection of the King: 'That sinne doth ten times agreuate it selfe, / That is committed in a holie place:
 . . . / That poyson shewes worst in a golden cup; / Darke night seemes darker by the lightning flash; / Lillies that fester smel far worse then weeds;

 / And euery glory that inclynes to sin,
 / The shame is treble, by the opposite' (2.1.441-2, 449-53).

1 power|powre 7 lords|Lords 9, 11 flower|flowre 12 outbraves|out-braues

- 95 The speaker alters the angle from which he views the discrepancy between outward fairness and inward faultiness in the addressee, stressing the dangerous freedom from reproach that his beauty allows him.
- 1 lovely beautiful; lovable: for the concept of an individual so attractive that moral faults appear only as beauties, cf. AC 1.1.49–50, 2.2.238–40; and, with more immediate application here, LC 316–22.
- 2 canker caterpillar or canker-worm (OED 4)
- 3 spot stain, sully; reproach, vilify (OED 1a, b) budding name suggests both 'burgeoning reputation' and 'role as a young scion of an aristocratic family'; cf. 'bud of nobler race', WT 4.4.95.
- 4 sweets sweet things, as in 12.11, with perhaps a more specific allusion to sugar and flower syrups or conserves 'enclosed' in a jar or box; but here the paradox is that, rather than being tightly enclosed, the sweets themselves enclose sins.
- 5 the (collective) tongue of those who comment on how you spend your time
- 6 lascivious comments ellipsis for 'comments on or accusations of lasciviousness' sport pleasure, with connotations of sexual pleasure; cf. VA 24, MM 3.2.120–1, Oth 2.1.228–9.
- 7 kind manner, fashion; with a hint that they will speak kindly
- 8 suggests that, though the youth is charged with lasciviousness, the distinction of his name exonerates him, making unfavourable accounts appear favourable. There is some uncertainty here about whether it is high birth or beauty that chiefly protects him from censure. The opening phrase may echo Sidney, AS 35.10–11: 'now long needy fame / Doth even grow rich, naming my Stella's name'.
- 9 mansion dwelling, place of residence
- 10 habitation place of abode (OED 2a), with a subsidiary play on 'habit' = apparel, clothing
- 12 turns Q's reading is surely right, the subject of both doth cover and turns being the transforming veil of beauty.
- 13 dear heart primarily a form of intimate and affectionate address, but also suggests a concern with the dear heart, or most intimate interior impulses, of the addressee; cf. dear heart's part, 46.12.
- 14 sounds proverbial, but not found elsewhere in quite this form: cf. 'Iron with often handling is worn to nothing' (Tilley, I92); and Polonius's sententious 'borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry', Ham 1.3.77. The surprising new field of imagery may carry an implication that ill-judged promiscuity threatens the young man's potency, especially given the sexual connotations of use, as in 6.5.

- 96 The youth is admired as much for his faults as for his youthful attractions, whose charm is so powerful that he could, if he wished, mislead (seduce?) even more of his admirers than he does at present.
- 1–2 Though the lines are parallel in construction, there is a distinction between l. 1, in which two separate groups of people identify the youth's moral faultiness either with youth or with wantonness, and l. 2, in which a single group of people finds charm (grace) in his combination of youth and gentle sport – a phrase which suggests, rather than 'lasciviousness' or 'caprice, whim' (OED wantonness 1a, g), 'aristocratic diversion' (OED gentle 2b), and so hints that it may be rank, as well as beauty, that glosses over his imperfections.
- 3 more and less those of higher and lower rank
- 4 The image is of a great lord whose suitors arrive as faults, but are immediately elevated to graces.
- 5–6 suggests both a literal reference to a queen, such as the dead Elizabeth, with her great love of elaborate jewellery, and a general metaphoric reference to unworthy court favourites who are admired because of their proximity to the throne
- 5 throned thronèd
- 8 translated transformed, metamorphosed; cf. MND 3.1.122.
- 9–10 There is a general reference to Matthew, 7.15, 'Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves', and cf. also 2H6 3.1.77–8; but more specifically the image here suggests sexual rapacity, as at the moment of rape in Luc 677: 'The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries', which in turn derives from Ovid, Fasti, 2.800: 'Parva sub infesto cum jacet agna lupo'.
- 10 At first it may seem that the suggestion is that it is lambs which change their appearance, but probably the suggestion is 'transform his appearance so that he looks like a lamb'.
- 11 gazers possibly implies a play on 'grazers', sheep-like admirers who will be misled, as in WT 4.4.109
- 12 the . . . state suggests both 'the power that comes from your condition of youthful beauty' and 'the force of your high rank'
- 13–14 repeated exactly from the end of 36 (sixty sonnets earlier, perhaps a significant interval?), but here deployed with different effect: in 36 the speaker views himself as the repository of shame on behalf of both friends; here the suggestion is that the young man's good reputation, which so far has been enhanced rather than undermined by his faults, will eventually be jeopardized if he takes too much advantage of his privileged position, and the speaker will be implicated in this disgrace.

96

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are loved of more and less;
Thou mak'st faults graces, that to thee resort:
As on the finger of a throned queen 5
The basest jewel will be well esteemed,
So are those errors that in thee are seen
To truths translated, and for true things deemed.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray
If like a lamb he could his looks translate? 10
How many gazers mightst thou lead away
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state?
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

3 loved| lou'd 5 queen|Queene 6 jewel|Jewell esteemed|esteem'd 8 deemed|deem'd
9 lambs|Lambs wolf|Wolfe 10 lamb|Lambe

- 97 The first of three sonnets on the speaker's separation from the youth. Their position may allude to Sidney's AS, in which 87–98 (and possibly also 99) relate to a period of physical separation. While Sidney's 97 treats absence as a form of 'night', during which the sun, Stella, shines elsewhere, Shakespeare's treats it as a form of winter.
- 2 pleasure that which makes the year pleasurable; with a subsidiary suggestion that the year is using the addressee at his pleasure (OED pleasure 5a) fleeting year the year that flies swiftly past; cf. 19.5, where time is instructed to 'Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st'.
- 4 old December's bareness December is personified as an old man, perhaps with a bald head; the bareness of former Decembers, former winters, is experienced; also suggests that the bareness is that of late December, when the month itself is old.
- 5 time removed time when I was removed (from you) summer's time As the next three lines make clear, this denotes the whole period presided over by summer, which extends from spring to harvest; it is astronomically reckoned from the summer solstice (21 June) to the autumnal equinox (22 or 23 September).
- 6 The teeming autumn Autumn is personified as an abundantly fertile woman; cf. Gaunt's description of England as 'This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings', R2 2.1.51: to 'teem' = 'bring forth young' or 'be full, as if ready to give birth' (OED 1, 2).
big with great with (young), ready to give birth to (OED big 4)
- 7 Bearing as in 1.4, suggests both 'transmitting' and 'giving birth to' wanton . . . prime ellipsis for 'the burden (of fertility) begotten by the lascivious spring'
- 8 as the wombs of pregnant widows do: here the 'father', the spring, has died, but autumn brings forth his abundant issue. The image is strongly reminiscent of 1.3–4.
- 9 seemed The past tense reinforces the sense that the summer period of separation is now over, and is being viewed from the perspective of late autumn.
- 10 no more than the benefits hoped for (in vain) by orphans and fatherless issue: the identification of the absent youth with spring and summer makes nature's autumnal bounty seem forlorn.
- 11 summer . . . thee 'Summer and his pleasures' are personified as courtiers or suitors who attend on the youth as their king or lord. Whereas in Nashe's Summer's Last Will and Testament (1600; Nashe, 3.233–95), with which this sonnet seems strongly connected, Summer predictably ends up by making Autumn his 'adopted heir', here his withdrawal is associated with the removed youth.
- 12 thou away while or because you are away the . . . mute pathetic fallacy: the literal time is autumn or later, but the poet attributes the silence of the birds to the young man's absence.
- 13–14 Or . . . pale While appearing to modify the preceding conceit, the poet elaborates it: such birdsong as there is is so dismal as to provoke the leaves to fade.
- 13 cheer mood, disposition
- 14 winter's near Rhyme and rhythm link the dreaded onset of winter with the fleeting year of l. 2.

97

How like a winter hath my absence been
 From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
 What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen,
 What old December's bareness everywhere!
 And yet this time removed was summer's time, 5
 The teeming autumn big with rich increase
 Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
 Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease:
 Yet this abundant issue seemed to me
 But hope of orphans, and unfathered fruit; 10
 For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
 And thou away, the very birds are mute;
 Or if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer
 That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

1 winter] Winter 2 year!] Ard'; yeare? Q 3 seen,] seene? 4 everywhere!] Malone; every where? Q
 5 removed] remou'd 6 autumn] Autumne 8 lords'] Lords 9 seemed] seem'd 10 orphans]
 Orphans unfathered] vn-fathered 11 summer] Sommer 14 winter's] Winters

- 98 This continues from the preceding sonnet, but with a retrospective view of the flowers of spring rather than of the fruits of teeming autumn: the speaker took no pleasure in the season because the youth, its archetype, is elsewhere.
- 2 proud pied splendid and variegated; there seems no need to hyphenate the double epithet, as most editors since Thomas Ewing and Malone have done. April is personified, as is conventional, as a gaudily dressed young man.
trim adornment, array (OED 4a); cf. IH4 4.1.113, where Hotspur describes the splendidly arrayed troops of Prince Hal as 'like sacrifices in their trim'.
- 3-4 put . . . That ellipsis for 'put such a spirit . . . that (even)'
- 4 heavy Saturn The planetary deity Saturn is associated with old age, coldness and disaster; cf. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, 2453-69; MA 1.3.12; Tit 2.3.31. Here he is seen as heavy in the sense of 'grave', 'ponderous' or 'slow, sluggish' (OED 13, 18, 19).
- 5 'nor neither
- 6 flowers which differ from each other in scent and colour; elaborates the pied effect of April
- 7 summer's story (cheerful) narrative suitable for summer; apparently Shakespeare's invention of a counterpart and opposite to the proverbial 'winter's tale', told by the fire in winter; cf. Marlowe and Nashe, Dido Queen of Carthage, 3.3.59; Mac 3.4.65; and, most pertinently, WT 2.1.25, 'A sad tale's best for winter'.
- 8 their proud lap presumably a metonym for 'the lap (of April, or of earth) which is proud to bear them'
- 9 lily's white This could be modernized alternatively as 'lilies white' = white lilies, or 'lilies' white' = whiteness of (plural) lilies. However, both the singular rose in the following line and the proverbial 'As white as a lily' (Tilley, L296) make a collective singular the most plausible reading.
- 10 vermilion bright red or scarlet (OED 2); not used by Shakespeare elsewhere
- 11 but sweet sweet, but no more than that; suggests a superficial acknowledgement of the pleasantness of spring flowers but figures of delight merely forms or outlines of pleasure
- 12 after in imitation of, like (OED 14c): suggests that the addressee is the Platonic archetype of beauty of which spring and summer are mere copies. Cf. Oth 5.2.11, 'thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature'; and Son 19.12, beauty's pattern.
- 14 Undercuts the speaker's previous denial that he has taken pleasure in the delights of spring, for he acknowledges after all that he did play, that is, sport, frolic, perhaps sexually (OED 10a, b, c), with the simulacra of the youth which the season offered. There may be a parallel with Sidney, AS, 91.10, in which Astrophil admits that in absence he has been pleased by the beauty of other ladies, but only because 'of you they models be'.

98

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud pied April, dressed in all his trim,
 Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
 That heavy Saturn laughed, and leaped with him.
 Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell 5
 Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
 Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
 Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose; 10
 They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
 Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
 Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
 As with your shadow I with these did play.

2 proud pied] proud pide Q; proud-pied Malone April, dressed . . . trim,] Aprill (drest . . . trim)
 4 Saturn] Saturne laughed] laugh't leaped] leapt 9 lily's] Lillies 10 rose] Rose 11 were] weare
 13 seemed] seem'd winter] Winter

- 99 This develops from the end of the preceding sonnet the conceit that the delightful attributes of spring flowers are only figures of the archetypal beauty of the youth. Some editors, closing 98 with a colon, have seen the whole sonnet as an account of the manner in which the speaker has 'played' with the spring flowers. Uniquely, the sonnet is fifteen lines long: this reinforces the sense of a potentially unlimited catalogue of flowers.
- 1 forward violet The violet is forward both because it flowers very early and because it has been bold or presumptuous in appropriating the youth's fragrance (OED forward 7, 8). Elsewhere Shakespeare associates violets with young courtiers; cf. R2 5.2.45–6: 'who are the violets now / That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?'
chide rebuke
- 2 Sweet thief fragrant thief; thief of fragrance thy . . . smells your sweetness that smells (sweet)
- 3–5 The . . . dyed The conceit is that the violet, invading the youth's body in order to steal his breath, has left behind tell-tale traces of purple in his veins.
purple pride purple colour in which you glory, take pride
- 5 too grossly dyed too obviously, manifestly stained, no doubt with a play on 'died', suggesting that the violets have perished in the youth's body and left purple streaks behind. Technically this appears to be the additional line, adding a third rhyme to l. 1; but alternatively we may count l. 1 as an introduction, and treat the sonnet proper as starting with l. 2.
- 6 I blamed the lily for stealing whiteness from your hand; I condemned it as an inadequate representation of your hand. Adonis' hand is identified with a lily, VA 362.
condemned condemnèd
- 7 buds of marjoram small tight curls which are also fragrant; the reference may be specifically to knotty or knotted marjoram, an aromatic herb used in cookery.
- 8 on thorns literally, 'on thorny stems'; but 'to stand on thorns' = 'to be in a painful state of anxiety or suspense' (OED thorns 1, 2). The roses are presumably imagined as fearful because they are guilty of stealing their colours from the youth.
- 10 had . . . both This one is presumably pink or 'carnation' = flesh pink in colour.
- 11 to his theft of red and white had added the further crime of stealing scent (breath)
- 12 in . . . growth when he was resplendent in reaching his fullest growth
- 13 A vengeful canker a canker-worm or caterpillar (cf. 35. 4, 95.2) ate . . . death consumed the rose to the point where it was killed
- 14 noted observed, took note of; cf. Luc 414.
- 15 But except that. This somewhat lame conclusion fails to modify, undercut or refine what has gone before: the extra-long sonnet is slack rather than rich.

99

The forward violet thus did I chide:
 'Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that smells,
 If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
 Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells
 In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.' 5
 The lily I condemned for thy hand,
 And buds of marjoram had stol'n thy hair;
 The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
 One blushing shame, another white despair;
 A third, nor red, nor white, had stol'n of both, 10
 And to his robb'ry had annexed thy breath;
 But for his theft, in pride of all his growth,
 A vengeful canker ate him up to death.
 More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
 But sweet, or colour, it had stol'n from thee. 15

3 breath?]; breath, Q 4 dwells]; dwells? Q 5 dyed] Capell; died Q, Benson 6 lily] Lillie 8 roses] Roses 9 One] Malone; Our Q, Benson 10, 15 stol'n] stolne 11 annexed] annext

- 100 The poet rebukes his Muse for abandoning her true subject, my love, and exhorts her to resume the war on time that will rescue the youth's beauty from decay. A new beginning, though one which resumes the war on time conducted in sonnets 1–19. We may imagine either that a period of poetic silence has elapsed between 99 and 100, or that the speaker's absence and preoccupation with mere shadows of the youth (cf. 98.14) constitutes a poetic desertion of him.
- 3 Spend'st . . . fury do you exhaust your inspiration? Fury presumably refers to the technical term furor poeticus, derived from Plato via Ficino. Cf. Sidney, AS, 74.4–5: 'Some do I hear of poet's fury tell, / But, God wot, wot not what they mean by it'; also E.K.'s gloss on Cuddie's last speech in the 'October' eclogue of Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar (1579) – 'He seemeth here to be ravished with a Poetical furie' (Shorter Poems, 182). some worthless song suggests either that the poet has frittered his energies away on other verses, or that some of the preceding sonnets, such as 97–99, with their seasonal preoccupations, constitute a deviation. Whatever worthless song refers to, it can surely not be a play.
- 4 compromising or shadowing your poetic energies in order to elevate or brighten unworthy topics or individuals; may also suggest that the poet's Muse has directed her attention to commoners – base subjects – abandoning the kingly or aristocratic youth.
- 5–6 redeem . . . time save (time) from being lost (OED redeem 8; and cf. 1H4 1.2.241) by means of verses which are gracious and/or aristocratic; there may also be suggestion that 100 is a 'gentler' number than those which have gone before.
- 7 the . . . esteem The first indication in Son that the addressee is an appreciative reader.
- 9 resty sluggish, indolent (OED 2a); and cf. Cym 3.7.3.
- 9–10 survey / If gaze at ('my love's sweet face') to see whether
- 10 graven inscribed; as in many preceding sonnets, time and the poet compete, the one seeking to inscribe lines of ageing, the other to counteract these with lines of verse.
- 11 If any if (you find) any be . . . decay be a satirist in attacking (and so counteracting) the process of decay (cf. OED satire II. 4, with quotation from the anonymous ULYSSES upon Ajax (1596), E1', 'Harke in thine eare, Misacmos is a Satire, a quipping fellow'). Satire in this sense is associated with the rough and hairy 'satyr', so the Muse, normally conceived of as female, is being enjoined to change both sex and function.
- 12 cause time's conquest of beauty, or marring of it (spoils suggests both), to be universally scorned despised despised
- 14 So in this manner; on condition that prevent'st outrun, outstrip (OED 3d), with perhaps some sense also of 'outdo, excel' (ibid. 3b) scythe . . . knife presumably a poetic tautology, in which time's curved scythe or sickle is alternatively described as a crooked knife; cf. age's cruel knife, 63.10; but the effect here is to make time seem doubly armed, and unlikely to be effectively outdone by the poet's languid Muse.

100

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
 To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
 Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
 Dark'ning thy power to lend base subjects light?
 Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem, 5
 In gentle numbers, time so idly spent;
 Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
 And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
 Rise, resty Muse: my love's sweet face survey,
 If time have any wrinkle graven there; 10
 If any, be a satire to decay,
 And make time's spoils despised everywhere:
 Give my love fame faster than time wastes life,
 So thou prevent'st his scythe and crooked knife.

11 satire] Satire 14 prevent'st] preuenst scythe] sieth

- 101 This sonnet continues the dialogue between the poet and his Muse: she claims that the youth's beauty needs no poetic embellishment, but he exhorts her to immortalize it in verse.
- 1 what . . . amends how can you make amends?
- 2 truth . . . dyed truth which is an integral part of the beauty it inhabits
- 3 depends are subordinate to; wait in expectation upon (OED 3, 6); the youth is treated as the Platonic archetype of truth and beauty, like the Phoenix and the Turtle (PT 62). For singular verb used with plural subject, cf. 41.3.
- 4 and therein dignified and you derive dignity from your own dependence on my love
- 5 haply perhaps
- 6 Since truth's colour, or beauty, is integral to it (picking up dyed from l. 2), it needs no additional colour, or pretext for embellishment.
- 7 pencil brush or instrument for painting, metaphorically 'transferred to word-painting or descriptive skill' (OED 1b, with this example); cf. time's pencil, 16.10.
to lay to put upon a surface in layers; to put or arrange colours on canvas (OED 41a, with this example); cf. Sidney, NA, 232, 'Shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts?', and a discussion of Sidney's revision of this passage, OA, xxx-xxxin.
- 8 what is best is at its best without adulteration or addition; sounds proverbial, but appears not to be, though we may find a parallel in WT 4.4.87-8
- 11 much outlive survive much longer than a gilded tomb Cf. 'the gilded monuments / Of princes' in 55.1-2, which is also 'outlived' by poetry.
- 12 ages . . . be Cf. 'The age to come', 17.7.
- 13 office duty, obligation
I . . . how implies that this and surrounding sonnets are written without the aid of the Muse, and are therefore uninspired; yet if they serve an exemplary function to the Muse, perhaps the poet does not really need her?
- 14 seem . . . shows Although in the octave the speaker has stressed the absolute authenticity of the youth's beauty, the wording here suggests that poetic art can offer only a 'seeming' beauty in contrast to the immediate appearance which he shows now.

101

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
 For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
 Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
 So dost thou, too, and therein dignified:
 Make answer, Muse, wilt thou not haply say, 5
 'Truth needs no colour with his colour fixed,
 Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay,
 But best is best if never intermixed'?
 Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
 Excuse not silence so, for't lies in thee 10
 To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
 And to be praised of ages yet to be.
 Then do thy office, Muse: I teach thee how
 To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

2 dyed] di'd 4 dignified] dignifi'd 6 fixed] fixt 8 intermixed] intermixt 11 outlive] out-lieve
 12 praised] praisd 13 Muse: . . . how] Muse, . . . how

- 102 Still claiming to have fallen silent, the poet claims that he loves just as much, though he shows it less, for fear of wearisome repetition.
- 1 in seeming in appearance, in show
- 3 merchandised reduced to the value of a saleable commodity (cf. OED 2, with this example): cf. 'There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd', AC 1.1.15.
rich esteeming the high value placed on it by its owner
- 4 publish broadcast, make public
- 5 but in the spring Cf. Proteus's 'spring of love', TGV 1.3.84; also CE 3.2.3.
- 7 Philomel the nightingale, supposedly metamorphosed from the princess Philomela after her rape by her brother-in-law Tereus; cf. Ovid, Met. 6.424–674.
summer's front the first period or beginning of summer (OED summer 6b, with this example): cf. 'April's front', WT 4.4.3.
- 8 her The use of her in ll. 10 and 13 suggests that Q's 'his' is a misreading of the MS, which may have read 'hir'. However, both Pooler (*Ard*¹, 98) and Booth (330) defend 'his'.
in . . . days as summer days develop and lengthen: the nightingale was believed to stop singing at the end of July; cf. Sidney, OA, 66.13–14, where, however, the nightingale is male.
- 9, 11 that because
- 11 wild . . . bough every tree branch is filled with the songs of wild birds: suggests both that the boughs are physically burdened with crowds of birds, and that the burdens, or refrains, that they sing crowd the air (OED burden 10)
- 12 pleasures which have become familiar are no longer so intensely enjoyable: cf. the proverb 'Familiarity breeds contempt' (Tilley, F47); and Son 12.11, 'sweets and beauties do themselves forsake'.
- 13 sometime sometimes (cf. 18.5); for some time
- 14 dull you bore you, be tedious to you; represent you in a tedious manner in my verse

102

My love is strengthened, though more weak in seeming;
 I love not less, though less the show appear.
 That love is merchandised, whose rich esteeming
 The owner's tongue doth publish everywhere.
 Our love was new, and then but in the spring, 5
 When I was wont to greet it with my lays,
 As Philomel in summer's front doth sing,
 And stops her pipe in growth of riper days.
 Not that the summer is less pleasant now
 Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night; 10
 But that wild music burdens every bough,
 And sweets grown common lose their dear delight:
 Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
 Because I would not dull you with my song.

3 merchandised| marchandiz'd 7 Philomel| Philomell 8 her| IR; his Q, Booth, Kerrigan 11 burdens| burthens bough| bow 13 sometime| some-time

- 103 Continuing to apologize for his inadequate or scanty verse, the speaker tells the youth to look in his glass to see his true excellence. This is the third time he has told him to look in his glass: cf. sonnets 3 and 77.
- 2 That in that, in so far as scope . . . pride opportunity to display her rhetorical splendour, or to reveal the youth of whom she is 'proud' (OED pride 7, 5a)
- 3 argument essential subject-matter, i.e. the youth: cf. thy lovely argument, 79.5.
- 3-4 all . . . beside has even less value at that time when my (poetic) praise has been bestowed on it: that is, my attempts to glorify you in verse have failed to enhance their subject-matter, yourself.
- 6 Look . . . glass an echo of 'Look in thy glass' (3.1), a hundred sonnets earlier; but whereas the previous injunction was admonitory – the youth's sight of himself was to prompt him to reproduce himself physically – this appears purely eulogistic.
- 7 overgoes transcends, overcomes (OED 4, 5a); cf. Gabriel Harvey's account of Spenser's ambition to 'overgo' Ariosto's Orlando Furioso in his Faerie Queene, in Spenser and Harvey, Three Proper, and wittie Letters (1580): Spenser, Prose Works, 471.
- 8 showing up my verse as dreary and inadequate and bringing me to shame
- 9-10 striving . . . mar while attempting to improve (my writing), to make (the subject I was trying to embellish) worse: cf. Sidney's account of Musidorus writing a verse letter, NA, 310, 'marring with mending, and putting out better than he left'.
- 10 well good, perfect
- 11 pass event, completion (of project) (OED 5, with this example)
- tend aim
- 13 sit be enthroned (OED 1b); cf. Luc 288.

103

Alack, what poverty my Muse brings forth,
That, having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument all bare is of more worth
Than when it hath my added praise beside.
O blame me not if I no more can write! 5
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That overgoes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful, then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well? 10
For to no other pass my verses tend
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit
Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.

7 overgoes] ouer-goes 10 well?] Capell; well Q, Benson

- 104 It seems that the youth has obeyed the injunction in 103.6, 'Look in your glass', and has, as in 77.5, discovered signs of ageing, for this sonnet is devoted to reassuring him that in the speaker's eyes he will never age; or, if he does, the poet will transmit an image of his perfect beauty to posterity.
- 1 Though apparently a loving compliment, this line suggests that in the eyes of himself and others the youth can be seen as old.
- 2 your . . . eyed a witty epanodos (= 'regression, turning to the same sound, when one and the same sound is repeated in the beginning and middle, or middle and end', Fraunce, ch. 23) which also plays on the conceit 'your I' = your identity
- 3 seems appears: at first this reads as a confident assertion that the youth's beauty is undiminished, but the acknowledgement in l. 12 that 'mine eye may be deceived' leads to a subsequent reinterpretation of seems as 'seems – perhaps falsely'.
three winters cold This apparently precise time reference, suggesting that three years have elapsed since poet and youth first met, should not be taken too literally. If it carries any literal allusion, it does not help us, since we do not know at what date the sonnet was written. But in any case, as Lee pointed out, a three-year passage of time was suggested by other sonneteers, such as Ronsard, Desportes, Vausuelin de la Fresnaie, and Daniel (Rollins, 1.255–6). Perhaps Tennyson, whose In Memoriam we know to have been composed over more than fifteen years, was following in this tradition when he imposed a three-year time-
- scheme on his sequence of lyrics (see Introduction, p. 21).
- 4 three summers' pride Trees' foliage is identified with the pride, or splendour, of summer; cf. RJ 1.2.10.
- 6 process progression (OED 1a)
- 8 fresh . . . green If fresh and green are treated as synonymous, the fair friend is undiminished in beauty; but on a second reading it may seem that there is a distinction between fresh, which may be equated with the fragrance of April, and green, which may be associated with the summer heat of June. Note also the adverse connotations of green: cf. 63.14n.
- 9 like . . . hand like the hand of a mechanical timepiece: cf. 77.7–8 and n.
- 10 Steal . . . figure (beauty) moves stealthily away from his outward appearance (cf. OED figure 4, and Fr. figure = face, visage); alternatively, if Steal is treated as transitive, 'steals from the sum (figure) of his allotted days or years'
- no pace perceived There is no perceptible movement or stepping.
- 11 hue used, as in 20.7 and 82.5, to stand for 'beauty of complexion or outward appearance'
- still doth stand stands still, appears to be motionless
- 13 age unbred posterity; future age of human beings not yet conceived; there may also be a suggestion of future readers who lack 'breeding', or aristocratic blood-lines.
- 14 The consummation (or eternal summer, as in 18.9) of human beauty lived and died before you were born. As in some earlier sonnets (cf. 63) this affirmation of the durability of the youth's beauty in art is undercut by the reminder that the fair youth will die.

104

To me, fair friend, you never can be old;
 For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
 Such seems your beauty still: three winters cold
 Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;
 Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turned 5
 In process of the seasons have I seen;
 Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burned,
 Since first I saw you fresh, which yet art green.
 Ah, yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
 Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived; 10
 So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
 Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived;
 For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred,
 Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

2 eyed| eyde 3 still: three winters| still: Three Winters Q: still. Three winters Malone 5 autumn turned| Autumne turn'd, 7 burned| burn'd 9 dial| Dyall 10 perceived| perceiu'd 11 hue| hew methinks| me thinks

- 105 While ostensibly exonerating himself from a charge of idolatry, the speaker celebrates his friend in threefold terms which recall the Trinity, and in particular the Trinitarian rhetorical formulas of the Athanasian Creed.
- 1 idolatry immoderate attachment to or veneration for any person or thing (OED 2)
- 2 idol subject of such devotion, which should properly be directed to God: cf. Hamlet's praise of Ophelia as 'my soul's idol', Ham 2.2.109.
- 4 still such Cf. 'such as the Father is, such is the Son: and such is the Holy Ghost', BCP, 65.
- 6 still perpetually
- 7 to constancy confined restricted to (the celebration of) undeviating kindness
- 9 argument subject-matter, as in 76.10, with which this sonnet has strong links
- 10 Fair, kind and true By repeating the three epithets from the preceding lines the speaker exemplifies the constancy of his verse, yet immediately undercuts it in 'varying to other words'.
- 11 this change this attempt to vary the terms in which the beloved's threefold virtues are expressed
- 12 spent exhausted
- 12 wondrous scope affords offers marvellous scope (for poetic invention)
- 13 'Beauty and honesty seldom meet' (Tilley, B163); and cf. AYL 1.2.40, 3.3.28.
- 14 seat residence, abode (OED 14, 15)

105

Let not my love be called idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be,
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love today, tomorrow kind, 5
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse, to constancy confined,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind and true is all my argument;
Fair, kind and true, varying to other words, 10
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
Fair, kind and true have often lived alone,
Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

1 called] cal'd idolatry] Idolatrie 2 idol] Idoll 7 confined] confin'de 10 varying] varrying
13 lived] liu'd

- 106 Looking at accounts of beautiful men and women in the past, the speaker claims that his friend excels them all: strongly parallel to Daniel's Delia (1592), 46, opening: 'Let others sing of knights and Palladins / In aged accents, and untimely words', but changed to masculine gender. The sonnet occurs in two MSS, Pierpont Morgan MA 1037 p.96 and Rosenbach MS 1083/16 p.256, in which it is entitled 'On his Mistris Beauty': see Appendix, p. 457.
- 1 chronicle . . . time account of time which is past or consumed, with some suggestion of time spent 'idly or unprofitably' (OED waste 9e; and cf. R2 5.5.49)
- 2 wights persons; the archaic word, which by this period often had contemptuous associations, suggests their old-fashioned, obsolete character; cf. Oth 2.1.158–60.
- 3 beauty of the individuals chronicled lending beauty to the (possibly rather antiquated) poetry in which they are described
- 4 lovely knights We might normally expect 'loveliness' to be the distinguishing attribute of chivalric ladies; the application of the epithet here to knights prepares for the claim that the (male) addressee is the consummation of human loveliness.
- 5 blazon description, record of virtues or excellences (OED 4, with this example); the heraldic origins of the word are apt in this backward-looking sonnet.
- sweet beauties best best and sweet(est) beauties, envisaged either as individual beautiful components – hand, foot, etc. – or as beautiful individuals. The traditional emendation to 'beauty's' seems uncalled for, though it cannot be excluded as an alternative reading permitted by Q's spelling.
- 6 The exclusion of 'hair' and 'breasts' from this wittily compact blazon of bodily beauties continues the subtle accentuation of masculine attributes; see n. on l. 4.
- 7 antique pen Cf. 19.10, where time wields an antique pen (a phrase unique to Shakespeare). However, the pen here is presumably collectively wielded by those who have composed the descriptions of l. 2.
- 8 master possess, have at your disposal (OED 6a, with this example): note again masculine language, reminiscent of master mistress in 20.2; the youth is claimed as superior to all women and men.
- 10 all you prefiguring all offering prophetic images of you: the mild blasphemy of the preceding sonnet's Trinitarian claims is here compounded with a suggestion that the youth's appearance was forecast in old chivalric literature, as Christ's was in the Old Testament.
- 11 for because, since but . . . eyes only with the eyes of divination, not having full sight of you
- 12 skill Though Sisson (1.213) defended Q's 'still' as 'as yet', in conjunction with enough it is almost impossible to gloss. If Thomas Tyrwhitt's emendation to skill (Rollins, 1.260–2) is adopted, the larger suggestion is that older writers, lacking the direct inspiration of the youth's beauty, could not do it justice; the present speaker and his contemporaries, who do see it, are dumbfounded by it.

106

When in the chronicle of wasted time
 I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
 And beauty making beautiful old rhyme,
 In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights;
 Then in the blazon of sweet beauties best, 5
 Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
 I see their antique pen would have expressed
 Even such a beauty as you master now:
 So all their praises are but prophecies
 Of this our time, all you prefiguring; 10
 And for they looked but with divining eyes
 They had not skill enough your worth to sing;
 For we which now behold these present days
 Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

1 chronicle] Chronicle 4 ladies] Ladies knights] Knights 5 beauties] Q, Benson; beauty's
Malone 7 pen] Pen expressed] exprest 11 looked] look'd 12 skill] Capell; still Q

- 107 A great change has taken place in the public sphere, which has turned out much better than expected; in the private realm, both poet and youth flourish, and the speaker claims that his verse will outlive both this and further changes. The topical allusions seem to conform best with the death of Elizabeth I and accession of James I in March to April 1603, followed by James's coronation and progress through the City of London in March 1604; for further discussion, see Introduction, pp. 21–4.
- 1 Not neither the prophetic soul the inward speculations (of the generality of people); cf. Ham 1.5.41, 'O my prophetic soul! My uncle!'
- 2 the wide world the world in general, presumably here a metonym for 'all those who inhabit the globe' – a rather different application from 'the wide world and all her fading sweets', 19.7
- 3 can regulate or set a limit to my right to possess my true love (OED control 5, 1). Booth (343) calls yet here 'nearly meaningless', but it may serve both to govern the two previous lines – 'not even my fears or others' prophecies . . . ' – and to hint at 'as yet': 'it may have looked as if my time was up, but as yet it is not'.
- 4 presumed to be surrendered to a sentence of limitation or confinement: if my true love is taken as referring to the person loved, rather than to the (shared or separate) emotion of love, an allusion to literal imprisonment can readily be discovered here. Shakespeare's early patron, the Earl of Southampton, was released from prison on the accession of James; his later one, William Herbert, was received back at court after a spell of imprisonment, followed by banishment, in 1601.
- 5 most readily glossed as 'the moon-Queen, Elizabeth, subject to death, has now been eclipsed by it' – i.e. she always was mortal, and now she is dead. (Cf. OED eclipse 1b, 'deprivation of light, temporary or permanent'; s.v. endure, 3, 4, 'to undergo, sustain, submit to'.)
- 6 Sombre or gloomy soothsayers laugh at their own predictions. The Roman associations of the word augurs (cf. OED augur sb. 2) suggest prophecies of long standing, as well as ones authorized by the state.
- 7 outcomes of which the world was unsure are now securely 'crowned', or brought to a happy consummation (cf. OED crown 10; Tem 3.1.69). This could readily be construed as an allusion to James I's accession and coronation (see Introduction, pp. 22–3).
- 8 The olives seem here to denote a 'period free from conflict' (cf. 2H6 4.4.87; Tim 5.4.82; AC 4.6.7), so that the suggestion is 'the peace we now enjoy announces further, unending, phases of peace'. The suggestion that olive trees planted at this moment will live for ever can only be symbolic, since olives do not grow in Britain; cf. 2H4 4.4.87, 'Peace puts forth her olive everywhere'.
- 9–10 Now . . . fresh 'Balm' is frequently associated by Shakespeare with the anointing of a monarch, as in R2 3.2.55, H5 4.1.277; but also more generally with healing. The 'balm' which characterizes this period of unexpected but welcome peace bestows its blessing on the youth – and/or the speaker's affection for him – who consequently looks blooming or flourishing.
- 10 death . . . subscribes Death submits to me (OED subscribe 8, with this example): there is a particular appropriateness in death's 'subscribing', literally = 'writing beneath', the poet, whose poor rhyme will triumph over him.
- 12 insults o'er exults over, triumphs in an insolent way (OED insult 1b)
- 13 this this poor rhyme: the fact that it has been so described somewhat detracts from the apparent compliment.
- 14 tyrants' crests the crowns or heraldic crests that identify monarchs: the use here of the word 'tyrant' serves both

- 108 Reaching 108, the total number of sonnets in Sidney's AS (imitated by several other sonneteers; see Introduction, p. 99), the poet takes stock of his achievements. He can find no new way of representing either himself or the youth in words, but is compelled to reiterate what he has often said before; in so doing he continually rediscovers his first love and the young man's first beauty, revived in language though vanished in nature.
- 1 character write, inscribe; cf. Ham 1.3.59.
 - 2 figured portrayed, represented (OED figure 4)
 - 3 *new to register Booth (348) defends Q's 'now', glossing the phrase as 'what now remains unrecorded'; but it seems more likely to be a compositorial slip for new, ll. 3–4 being constructed on the parallelism of trying speak . . . my love in a new way, and register . . . thy . . . merit in a new way. Register = record, note.
 - 5 sweet boy the only time the youth is so addressed, though the epithet sweet has often been applied to him in other forms (cf. 1.8, 4.10, 13.4, 35.4, 38.3 and passim). Falstaff unwisely greets the newly acceded Henry V as 'my sweet boy', 2H4 5.5.43. The phrase has caused embarrassment, for Benson altered it to 'sweet love', and a German editor, Richard Flatter, to 'sweet joy' (Rollins, 1.271–2).
like prayers divine another application of religious formulas (cf. 105, 106.9–10 and n.): the speaker is obliged to repeat his daily praises of the youth just as Elizabethans were required, morning and evening, to repeat 'divine prayer'. Such applications of repetitive religious devotion to secular love were not uncommon: cf. Sidney's account of Leicester saying his rosary by adding 'and Elizabeth' to 'Our Father' (Sidney, Prose, 31).
 - 8 hallowed . . . name revered your name as holy, as in 'hallowed be thy name' in the Lord's Prayer (BCP); there may also be a play on 'halloo', to shout or call (OED 3); and cf. 'halloo your name to the reverberate hills', TN 1.5.291. Falstaff appears to conflate the two words in his claim that 'For my voice, I have lost it with hallooing, and singing of anthems', 2H4 1.2.187–8.
 - 9 eternal . . . case love which is everlasting enclosed in the outward form of a new kind of love; eternal love again has strong religious connotations, as in Sidney's CS, 32.13–14: 'Then farewell, world, thy uttermost I see; / Eternal love, maintain thy life in me'.
 - 10 Weighs not does not pay heed to, care about (OED weigh 14a, b) injury of age the injuries done by age to the body
 - 11 nor yields to the wrinkles which are inevitable (cf. OED give 23)
 - 12 makes the object of love, though aged, for ever his boy page or attendant (this follows well from the sweet boy of line 5); or makes ancient love, love of long standing, for ever his subject-matter – the page on which he writes (this follows well from the ink of l. 1)
 - 13–14 finding the original impulse of love generated in the very place (by implication, your body) in which the passage of time and external appearance appear to show (the beauty which prompted love) as no longer present: cf. 104, which also closes with a rhyme of unbred / dead.

108

What's in the brain that ink may character
 Which hath not figured to thee my true spirit?
 What's new to speak, what new to register,
 That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
 Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine, 5
 I must each day say o'er the very same,
 Counting no old thing old; thou mine, I thine,
 Even as when first I hallowed thy fair name:
 So that eternal love, in love's fresh case,
 Weighs not the dust and injury of age, 10
 Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place
 But makes antiquity for aye his page,
 Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
 Where time and outward form would show it dead.

1 ink] Inck 2 figured] figur'd spirit?] spirit, 3 new . . . new] Malone; new . . . now Q, Benson
 5 boy] love Benson

- 109 The first of two sonnets on the speaker's voluntary absence from the youth. He claims that his soul still resides in the young man, and that nothing else in the world has value for him.
- 2 my . . . qualify to modify or reduce the strength of my love's ardency (OED qualify 8, 11)
- 3 easy easily, readily depart separate, be divided: cf. Solemnization of Matrimony (BCP, 292), 'till death us depart'.
- 5 home of love Like the first quatrain, this suggests the domesticity of marriage.
- 7 exactly at the time appointed, not altered by the passage of time (cf. OED exchange 5, with this example); however, the second phrase probably also plays with the notion 'not given away or altered in response to a changing environment', as in 'Why with the time do I not glance aside', 76.3. Booth (351) finds in this line a display of 'Falstaff-like gall in solemnly making a logical-sounding equation between two non-comparable things: the journeys of a traveler and the promiscuous sexual liaisons of an unfaithful lover'.
- 8 water for my stain water to wash away my faults: another image with religious associations. As Booth (352) observes, 'The essential idea of the line is the implied argument that since the speaker's crime was his departure, his return cancels it.' There may also be a suggestion of repentant tears, expressed in the sonnet itself.
- 9 reigned prevailed, predominated
- 10 blood passion, appetite (OED 5, 6)
- 11 it my nature
preposterously unnaturally, absurdly (OED 1): cf. Brabantio's indignation at the idea of his daughter being attracted to Othello: 'For nature so preposterously to err, / (Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,) / Sans witchcraft could not' (Oth 1.3.61-3).
stained polluted, morally compromised: cf. 33.14, 35.3.
- 12 nothing something of no value, in contrast to the microcosmic sum of good embodied in the addressee; for nothing also suggests 'for no cause'.
- 13 wide universe expands on the wide world of 107.2, perhaps partly to accommodate the sound you, the second person plural, alluding to 'everyone else in the world except thou'. Shakespeare uses universe only once elsewhere, in H5 4 Prol. 3.
- 14 my rose Cf. beauty's rose, 1.2; his rose, 67.8. As a form of address, rose = a peerless or matchless person, a paragon (OED 5), most often applied to women, though Ophelia calls Hamlet the 'rose of the fair state' (Ham 3.1.154).

109

O never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seemed my flame to qualify;
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love; if I have ranged, 5
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain;
Never believe, though in my nature reigned
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood, 10
That it could so preposterously be stained,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good:
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

2 seemed] seem'd 5 ranged] rang'd 7 exchanged] exchang'd 9 reigned] raign'd 11 stained] stain'd 13 universe] Vniuerse 14 rose] Rose

- 110 The speaker acknowledges that he has strayed in affection from the youth, but claims that this has served only to strengthen his original and continuing devotion.
- 1 here and there in this place and that; in various places (OED here 9a; and cf. Ham 1.1.93)
- 2 motley . . . view fool in appearance; and since the motley worn by fools was particoloured, there is also a suggestion of visible fickleness.
- 3 Gored (1) pierced, wounded (OED 1); or (2) divided up with differently coloured wedges or 'gores' of cloth; or (3) defiled as with filth or congealed blood: (2) follows on best from the image of motley, and could be linked with TN 1.5.63, 'I wear not motley in my brain'; but (3) leads on better to the next phrase.
- 4 turned my new attachments into old (or former) injuries or wrongs; or offences against my old affections
- 5 truth true love (mine and/or yours) embodied in you. The youth has previously been associated with truth in 14.11, 14; 37.4; 54.2; 60.11; and 101. 3, 6.
- 6 Askance and strangely disdainfully or obliquely, and in a 'strange' or unfriendly manner; cf. 49.5, and look strange, 89.8.
- 7 blenches sidelong glances (OED 2, with this example) another youth a renewed period of youth; another young man: as Booth (356) points out, 'In context of the speaker's infidelity and the relative ages of lover and beloved . . . another youth carries incidentally self-incriminating suggestions of "a different boy".'
- 8 and experiments with or trials of inferior (love) demonstrated you to offer me the best experience of love (cf. OED essay 11, with this example)
- 9 all is done suggests both 'all my infidelity is at an end' and 'my life is complete'
save . . . end Malone's emendation of Q's first 'have' to save has been adopted, because the open-endedness of 'have what shall have' does not seem to square with the absolute claim made in never more in the following line; also, the invocation of the divine seems consistent with by all above in l. 6 and next my heaven in l. 13: the speaker claims that his reaffirmation of love for the addressee is now lifelong, to be ended or transcended only by 'what shall have no end' – divine love.
- 10–11 grind / . . . proof sharpen or intensify by experiments elsewhere: an elaboration of the notion of making an appetite keen, as in 118.1, with the appetite as a knife whose grindstone is other objects of love
- 11 to . . . friend to test out (by comparison) the worth of a former friend; to cause suffering to a friend who is older: like l. 7, this hints strongly that the speaker's affections have deviated towards one (even) younger than the addressee.
- 12 A . . . love one god-like in capacity for love; a god who is in love; one made a god in the transaction of love, so perhaps deified by the speaker's adoration. The invocation of his love for the youth in terms of religious devotion, initiated in 105, reaches a climax here. confined limited, restricted: apart from the extravagance of claiming that he can love only his friend when a few lines earlier he acknowledged that he has strayed to other loves, the word confined introduces suggestions of unwelcome restrictions such as imprisonment or even torment; cf. old Hamlet, 'for the day confin'd to fast in fires', Ham 1.5.11.
- 13 In which case you, who are for me the best thing in the world short of heaven, (should) receive me warmly: contrast with 21.1–3, in which the speaker distinguished himself from the poets who elaborated their themes with reference to heaven itself.
- 14 most most loving As Booth points out (359), although this registers initially as an extravagant compliment, it also 'carries perverse overtones', and may be read as suggesting that the addressee outdoes the speaker in his ability to find affections new.

110

Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
 And made myself a motley to the view,
 Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most
 dear,
 Made old offences of affections new.
 Most true it is that I have looked on truth 5
 Askance and strangely; but by all above,
 These blenches gave my heart another youth,
 And worse essays proved thee my best of love.
 Now all is done, save what shall have no end;
 Mine appetite I never more will grind 10
 On newer proof, to try an older friend,
 A god in love, to whom I am confined:
 Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
 Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

3 Gored] Gor'd 5 looked] lookt 6 Askance] Asconce strangely; but] strangely: But 8 proved] prou'd 9 save] Malone; haue Q: haue Ard' 10 grind] grin'de 12 god] God confined] confin'd

- 111 The speaker blames Fortune for his public, and therefore publicly compromised, way of life; he implores the young man to pity him and to impose on him any penance he wishes. Like the preceding sonnet, but more plausibly, this has been frequently read as an allusion to Shakespeare's public profession as an actor-dramatist.
- 1 do you a command: = do it, you *with Fortune chide Although not adopted by Benson, the correction of Q's 'wish' to with seems clearly correct, especially since 'chide . . . with', signifying 'complain against, dispute angrily with' (OED 2b), was a regular expression; cf. Ham 4.2.167.
- 2 guilty . . . deeds the goddess who is morally responsible for, or guilty of, the things I have done wrong
- 3 That who
 my life my means of living, my support; cf. Tem 2.1.47–8: 'Gon. Here is everything advantageous to life. / Ant. True; save means to live'.
- 4 public means public methods; public money, such as that paid by those who attend the 'public' theatres. The line can be read with public means as either subject or object – breeding public manners, or bred by them.
 public manners breeds causes or generates (or is caused by) a style of behaviour appropriate to a public way of life: John Davies of Hereford's comment on Shakespeare having jeopardized his social position by his career as an actor may be pertinent here; cf. 87.14n.
- 5 my . . . brand my name is marked or stigmatized, as in the Roman practice of public censure, or 'branded' with a hot iron, like the hand or face of an Elizabethan criminal (OED brand 4b)
- 6 almost . . . subdued Probably almost governs subdued rather than thence:
 ('as a result of my occupation) my nature is almost reduced to the level . . .'. For subdued in this sense, cf. KL 3.4.70: 'nothing could have subdued nature / To such a lowness but his unkind daughters'; cf. also Oth 1.3.25, 'My heart's subdued / Even to the very quality of my lord'.
- 7 the dyer's hand As the dyer's hand is stained by dye, so is the speaker's nature by his public occupation. In so far as Shakespeare's occupation was writing, rather than acting, his own hand could also be imagined as darkened with ink.
- 8 renewed restored to what I would have been if not polluted or stigmatized in the manner described in the octave. The word has biblical associations, as in 'thy youth is renewed like the eagle's', Psalms, 104.5, or 'though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day', 2 Corinthians 4.16.
- 9 a willing patient one who suffers pain willingly; one who is willingly sick, or compliant in accepting treatment (OED patient 1a, 2)
- 10 Potions of eisell concoctions of vinegar; cf. Ham 5.1.271: 'Woo't drink up eisell, eat a crocodile?' Though many medicines, including some used against the plague, were indeed made with vinegar, the word is probably used here, as in Ham, to suggest drinks of extreme bitterness like the 'vinegar . . . mingled with gall' offered to Christ on the cross (Matthew 27.34).
- 11 No bitterness (there is) no bitterness
- 12 Nor double penance 'nor (will I protest at) double penance'
- 14 If the friend's pity suffices for the speaker's cure, perhaps he will not, after all, be required to consume the bitter potions of ll. 9–12.

111

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
 The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
 That did not better for my life provide
 Than public means, which public manners breeds; 5
 Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
 And almost thence my nature is subdued
 To what it works in, like the dyer's hand;
 Pity me, then, and wish I were renewed,
 Whilst like a willing patient I will drink
 Potions of eysell 'gainst my strong infection; 10
 No bitterness that I will bitter think,
 Nor double penance to correct correction.
 Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
 Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

1 with] Capell; wish Q, Benson 6 subdued] subdu'd 7 dyer's] Dyers 8 renewed] renu'de 10 eisell] Eysell

- 112 This continues directly from the preceding sonnet, adding to the idea that the addressee has it uniquely in his power to expunge the speaker's faults, a more hyperbolic conceit of nothing in the world, except his friend, registering with the speaker.
- 1-2 doth . . . brow smooths over (by filling up) the dent made in my reputation by popular repute: scandal is here imagined as a physical stumbling-block or stone (OED scandal 1b) which has made a depression or indentation (OED impression 2a) in the speaker's brow, or visible public image. There may also be a notion of a printed book, perhaps written by the poet (cf. 111.6-7), whose title-page is stamped, or printed, in a disgraceful manner, but redeemed by the young man's love and pity; cf. 2H4 1.1.60: 'This man's brow, like to a title-leaf, / Foretells the nature of a tragic volume'. If this reading is accepted, we may discern here an allusion to Jaggard's piratical publishing of PP (twice) in 1599, with Shakespeare's name on the title-page, which, according to Thomas Heywood, caused Shakespeare to be 'much offended with Master Jaggard that altogether unknowne to him presumed to make so bold with his name' (T. Heywood, Apology for Actors (1612), sig. G4).
- 3 calls . . . ill gives me a good or a bad name
- 4 So provided that o'er-green . . . allow gloss over what I have done wrong and praise my good deeds: though commentators have made heavy weather of o'er-green, emending it to 'o'er-skreen', 'o'er-grieve' or 'o'er-grain', and others have engaged in elaborate expositions (see, for instance, Everett, 'Greening'), Malone and OED are probably correct in glossing Q's reading as a nonce word meaning 'To cover with green, clothe with verdure; hence fig. to cover so as to conceal a defect, embellish'. 'Allow' (OED 1) = praise, commend, sanction.
- 5 my all-the-world Cf. Constance's lament for her absent son Arthur, KJ 3.3.103-4: 'O Lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son! / My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!'
- 7-8 *George Steevens called these two lines 'purblind and obscure' (Rollins, 1.284), but it is the second only that poses major problems. Line 7 presumably means '(because it is your opinion only that I care about) it is as if no one but you is alive as far as I am concerned, and I live in the opinion of no one else'. Line 8 is more difficult, but if T.G. Tucker's emendation (Rollins, 1.284) of Q's 'or changes' to o'er-changes is adopted (cf. 'o'er-silvered', the accepted rendering of Q's 'or siluer'd', 12.4) it yields up: 'so that my resolute (strengthened) perceptions transmute both right and wrong'. With steed cf. VA 376; R2 5.2.34; R3 1.1.148; for o'er-changes, see OED overchange (obsolete), 'to change into something else or into another condition; to transmute'.
- 9 profound abysm deep gulf or bottomless pit; 'abysm' is most often associated with hell, as in AC 3.13.146, but can also suggest a mental gulf, as in Tem 1.2.50, 'the dark backward and abysm of time' in Miranda's memory. These three are the only occurrences of the word in Shakespeare.
- 9-10 care / Of anxiety about, heed to
- 10 adder's sense my senses, which are collectively deaf or unresponsive: cf. 'As deaf as an adder', Tilley, A32, with this example.
- 11 stopped stoppèd
- 12 how . . . dispense how, given my neglect of or obliviousness to (the opinions of others); or, given my condition of being neglected, I excuse myself, or disregard (the world); cf. OED dispense 9, 12.
- 13 in . . . bred brought into existence in my discourse or preoccupations (OED purpose 4b, 5)
- 14 None of the proposed emendations to Q's 'y'are' yields easier sense. The line as it stands can be read as '(because I have excluded the rest of the world

- 113 This sonnet resumes the absence motif of 109, combining it with a further elaboration of the claim in 112 that 'You are my all-the-world': he sees the outside world only in terms of his friend.
- 1 mine . . . mind My 'mind's eye', which continues to see you while I am physically absent, is all that is operative.
- 2 that which guides me where to walk (that is, my physical eyesight)
- 3 Doth part partly performs
- 4 out put out, extinguished
- 5 it . . . heart (Physical eyesight) transmits no images to my interior consciousness: for the eye/heart relationship, cf. 24.
- 6 latch Capell's emendation of Q's 'lack' has been adopted; the copy MS may have read 'lach'. For 'latch' = grasp, seize (with the mind), cf. OED 1a; and Mac 4.3.195.
- 7 his quick objects the live things that the eye encounters
- 8 Nor does the eye that sends messages to the inner consciousness retain the image of what it sees.
- 10 sweet-favoured Although Q's 'sweet-fauor', = 'beautiful appearance', makes sense, the hyphenation suggests an adjectival application, and its positioning as an alternative and opposite term to deformed'st seems to match the exact parallelism of mountain/sea, day/night, crow/dove, so Nikolaus Delius's emendation (Rollins, 1.286) has been adopted.
- 12 shapes . . . feature transforms their appearance so that it becomes yours (cf. OED shape 2a, 7a)
- 13 Incapable unable to take in, receive or keep (OED 1a, with this example) replete full to capacity
- 14 *Though many editors have tried to rationalize this line by emending Q's mine, Malone is surely correct in saying 'Untrue is used as a substantive. The sincerity of my affection is the cause of my untruth; i.e. of my not seeing objects truly, such as they appear to the rest of mankind.'

113

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind,
 And that which governs me to go about
 Doth part his function, and is partly blind;
 Seems seeing, but effectually is out:
 For it no form delivers to the heart 5
 Of bird, of flower, or shape which it doth latch;
 Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
 Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch:
 For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
 The most sweet-favoured or deformed'st creature, 10
 The mountain, or the sea, the day, or night,
 The crow, or dove, it shapes them to your feature.
 Incapable of more, replete with you,
 My most true mind thus maketh mine untrue.

6 latch] Capell; lack Q 10 sweet-favoured] this edn (Delius); sweet-fauor Q; 12 crow] Croe dove] Doue 13 more, replete] more repleat, 14 My] Thy Malone mine] mine eye Capell

- 114 Picking up from the preceding sonnet the idea that ugly things, as well as beautiful, are transformed in his mind's eye to images of the friend, the speaker considers whether his mind is 'flattered' by his eye or truly instructed by it.
- 1-3 Or whether . . . Or whether Is it the case that . . . or that . . . ? For the or whether construction framing alternatives, cf. Cor 1.3.63; MV 3.2.116-18.
- 1 being . . . you being honoured, blessed with your love: cf. 87.14, in which the speaker believes he enjoys the youth's love as a king (and OED crown v. 10).
- 2 greedily consume this flattery (pleasing delusion), which is the disease incident to kings. For another association of flattery with drinking, cf. Tim 1.2.132-4.
- 4 your love your love to me; my love of you this alchemy this power to transmute base and ugly things to precious and beautiful; cf. the sun's heavenly alchemy, 33.4.
- 5 make of make out of things indigest things which are shapeless and crude, therefore not beautiful
- 6 cherubins youthful angels: Shakespeare associates cherubins (the form of the word he normally uses) with delicate beauty as well as with goodness: cf. Othello's address to Desdemona as 'thou young and rose-lipped cherubin', Oth 4.2.63.
- 8 to his beams The eye was thought of by the Elizabethans as emitting beams of light which illuminate what is seen (cf. Sidney, AS, 6.3 and passim).
- 10 most kingly most like the king subject to flattery, as defined in l. 2
- 11 what . . . greeing what best suits the individual taste or appetite (of my mind): cf. OED gust 2, with this example: 'greeing', ppl. a., concordant.
- 12 to adjusted to, to suit
- 13-14 'tis . . . begin The weakness of the mind, in preferring the poisoned cup of falsehood to the pure cup of truth, is mitigated by the fact that in his eagerness (loves it) he drinks it first - performing the tasting function normally exercised by a menial servitor, not a monarch.

114

Or whether doth my mind, being crowned with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?
Or whether shall I say mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make of monsters and things indigest 5
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, 'tis the first, 'tis flatt'ry in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up: 10
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is greeing,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup.
If it be poisoned, 'tis the lesser sin,
That mine eye loves it and doth first begin.

1 crowned] crown'd 4 alchemy,] Alcume? 13 poisoned] poison'd

- 115 This sonnet plays with the paradoxes of a love claimed as absolute, yet still increasing, and therefore altering. Donne's 'Loves Growth', possibly inspired by this sonnet, explores similar paradoxes; cf. 'Me thinks I lied all winter, when I swore, /My love was infinite, if spring make it more' (5-6).
- 2 Pooler (Ard') asks, unnecessarily, 'Can this refer to lost sonnets?' Many of the preceding sonnets make such a claim, either directly or obliquely; see for instance 91, 105.
- 3 Yet but, however; as yet
- 4 most full flame flame (of love) burning at what appeared to be maximum intensity; the image of love's ardency is resumed from 109.2.
- 5 But reckoning time The loose syntax of this quatrain makes it hard to parse: at first it may appear that time (anticipating the images of time calling nature to account in 126) is the subject of reckoning; also, as Booth (379-80) points out, reckoning has some aural similarity to 'wrecking'. However, on a second or later reading it may seem to work better if we take the speaker to be the subject of reckoning, who was making absolute claims for the strength of his love, 'without reckoning on, or paying regard to, the operation of time'. millioned accidents unforeseen occurrences or unusual events (OED accident 1) which are numbered by the million: see OED million 1, with this example; OED observes however that Q's 'milliond' may simply be a dialectal form of 'million'.
- 6 'twixt vows between vows and their fulfilment
- 7 Tan darken and toughen, like leather which is tanned; cf. Ham 5.1.162-5. sacred beauty beauty which had appeared to be consecrated and therefore unchanging
- 8 cause strongly resolute intentions to be diverted (1) 'into the direction dictated by things as they change'; but probably also (2) 'into the current of changing circumstances' (IR)
- 9 fearing of fearing
- 10 Might . . . say Was it not reasonable for me at that time to say?
- 11 certain o'er uncertainty perhaps, 'confident of triumphing over changes or uncertainties'; or, as Booth (384) proposes as an alternative, 'I was more certain than even uncertainty [which is the surest thing in life]'
- 12 Crowning the present resumes image from 114.1: suggests 'identifying the present moment with complete fulfilment or happiness'
- 13 Love . . . babe because identified with the baby Cupid, not mentioned by name until 153
- then . . . so repeats the claim of l. 10 that it was reasonable or natural for the speaker to assert, in the past, that his love was absolute. The simplest interpretation of then is 'since love is a baby, it was natural that I, in the full ardency of love, was naive and lacking in insight about the future'. For an account of several other readings of ll. 13-14, see Booth, 382-4.

115

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
 Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
 Yet then my judgement knew no reason why
 My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
 But reckoning time, whose millioned accidents 5
 Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings,
 Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
 Divert strong minds to th' course of alt'ring things;
 Alas, why, fearing of time's tyranny,
 Might I not then say, 'Now I love you best', 10
 When I was certain o'er uncertainty,
 Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?
 Love is a babe; then might I not say so,
 To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

5 millioned] milliond 6 kings] Kings 11 uncertainty] in-certainty Q: incertainty Ard' 13 babe] Babe

- 116 Building on the preceding sonnet's attempt to define love's constancy in a world of change, the speaker now sets up an ideal of true love as unaltered and unalterable, which he claims is embodied in himself – or in his sonnet. For a musical adaptation of this sonnet, see Appendix, p. 465.
- 1 Let me not may I never; I hope that I shall not
- 1–2 marriage . . . impediments 'acknowledge objections to the fulfilment of the union of true (truly loving) minds or intentions': legal terminology which recalls the marriage service in the Book of Common Prayer: 'if any man do allege and declare any impediment why they may not be coupled together in matrimony . . . then the Solemnization must be deferred until such time as the truth be tried' (BCP, 291). The challenge offered resembles the calling of banns, but the marriage proposed is of true minds, not (necessarily) of bodies.
- 2 love . . . love presumably, '(apparent) love is not true love'; cf. 'A perfect love does last eternally', Tilley, L539, with this example; also ibid., L573, 'Love without end has no end.'
- 4 bends turns (itself), deviates (OED 13) with . . . remove to move in response to, or in harmony with, the change or departure of the love-object
- 5 ever-fixed mark permanent beacon or signal for shipping; cf. Othello's penitent words to the dead Desdemona, Oth 5.2.268–9: 'Here is my journey's end, here is my butt, / And very sea-mark of my utmost sail'; also Cor 5.3.74.
ever-fixed ever-fixèd
- 7 star guiding star; most readily identified with 'the northern star' (JC 3.1.60–2), or Pole Star wand'ring bark lost ship; in 80.7 the speaker compared himself to a saucy bark.
- 8 Whose worth's unknown the value of which is beyond human measurement: there seems again to be some association with 80, where the speaker praises 'your worth, wide as the ocean'. his . . . taken its altitude is scientifically measured: 'take height' was a regular term in navigation and astronomy (OED take 32b).
- 9 Time's fool Something mocked by Time, because Time has power over it; cf. and contrast HH 5.4.81: 'And thought's the slave of life, and life, time's fool'.
- 9–10 though . . . come though physical beauty falls within the range of time's sickle: bending suggests, in addition to its curved shape, a capacity to scoop up even what may appear to lie far from it.
- 11 his Time's
- 12 bears it out sustains without giving way, endures; see OED bear 15b; cf. also AW 3.3.5–6, 'we'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake / To th'extreme edge of hazard'.
edge of doom first onset of Doomsday, the Last Judgement (cf. OED edge 11): though the marriage service opens with an injunction to the couple to affirm the lawfulness of their union 'as you will answer at the dreadful day of judgement, when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed' (BCP, 291), it is clear that the death of either partner dissolves the bond; the love defined here appears not merely life-long but world-long. Though Booth (386) argues for the possibility that doom also means merely 'death', with reference to 14.14 and the proverb 'Death's day is doomsday' (Tilley, D162), this does not seem in key with the hyperbole of the rest of the sonnet.
- 13–14 Booth (387–92) discusses this sonnet at length, and in particular defends its ending against the charge of 'bombast', which he defines vividly as 'high-sounding, energetic nonsense that addresses its topic but does not indicate what is being said about it'. However, reading this sonnet in the context of the preceding one, on love's inevitable changeableness, as well as the three following, on the

116

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
 Admit impediments; love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove.
 O no, it is an ever-fixed mark, 5
 That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
 It is the star to every wand'ring bark,
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
 Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
 Within his bending sickle's compass come; 10
 Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
 But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
 If this be error and upon me proved,
 I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

speaker's deviations from love of the addressee, it is difficult not to feel that in the final couplet Shakespeare is living up to his surname, originating as a 'nickname for a belligerent person, or perhaps a bawdy name for an exhibitionist' (Hanks and Hodges, 482). At 116 sonnets into the sequence, it is clear enough that the speaker has writ, and the challenge seems a Pistol-like piece of swaggering.

 13 upon me proved proved against me; or proved (to be error) with reference to myself: language of legal or chivalric challenge, as in KL 5.3.110–13, 'If any man will maintain upon Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor'.

116] 119 5 ever-fixed] euer fixed 8 height] high 9 Love's] Lou's For a MS adaptation, see Appendix, p. 465

- 117 Continuing the legal challenge suggested by the couplet of the preceding sonnet, the speaker subjects himself to his friend's (supposed) allegations of ingratitude and unfaithfulness, defending himself on the ground that he was testing his friend's constancy.
- 1 scanted all withheld or neglected all those things: see OED scant 2; and cf. KL 1.1.281, 'You have obedience scanted'.
 - 2 in which I ought to recompense you in the magnificent terms which you deserve; or for the great things you have done for me: your great deserts may also suggest that the addressee is a great (= aristocratic) man, who is therefore especially deserving of service; cf. Duty so great, 26.5.
 - 3 upon . . . call to invoke or appeal to your most precious (most affectionate) love: cf. OED call 23b, c.
 - 4 bonds moral and/or personal ties or obligations: this line suggests that the speaker has received concrete favours from his friend, as well as being loved by him in the abstract.
 - 5 frequent familiar, in company (with): cf. WT 4.2.33–4, 'he is of late much retired from court, and is less frequent to his princely exercises'.
unknown minds strangers, individuals not known to you: perhaps so described to distinguish them from the true minds of 116.1
 - 6 elliptical for 'given (away) your own richly earned right to spend time with me'
 - 7 hoisted sail As in 116.5–8 and 80.5–12, the speaker sees himself as a small sailing boat, here one which has allowed the winds of favour or friendship to carry it all over the place.
 - 9 Book record, itemize, as if drawing up a list of charges or accusations
 - 10 pile up conjectures (of my misdeeds) on the basis of what has been clearly demonstrated
 - 11 within the level within the aim or firing range (archery term); cf. OED level 9.
 - 12 wakened hate your hate which has been activated by my derelictions
 - 13 my appeal says my defence against your accusation claims prove test; demonstrate

117

Accuse me thus: that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay,
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds, 5
And given to time your own dear-purchased right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
And on just proof surmise accumulate; 10
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your wakened hate:
 Since my appeal says I did strive to prove
 The constancy and virtue of your love.

6 dear-purchased] deare purchas'd 10 surmise accumulate;] surmise, accumilate, 14 love.] loue

- 118 The speaker continues to attempt to defend himself against allegations that he has been unfaithful to his friend, this time through the analogy of bitter foods or medicines used to improve appetite or health, elaborating such proverbs as 'Sweet meat must have sour sauce' (Tilley, M839), or 'Sweet sauce begins to wax sour' (S97).
- 1 Like as just as, even as; cf. the opening of 60, where, however, the analogy is straightforward and cogent.
- 2 eager compounds pungent or bitter-tasting concoctions (OED eager 1a, with this example): cf. the image applied to the action of poison on old Hamlet's bloodstream, Ham 1.5.68–70: 'with a sudden vigour it doth posset / And curd, like eager droppings into milk, / The thin and wholesome blood'.
urge stimulate, excite (OED 7a)
- 3 As as (also)
- 4 sicken . . . sickness make ourselves ill to ward off illness: alludes to the practice of taking regular 'purges' at certain times of year (e.g. spring) to ward off infection
- 5 ne'er cloying In Q's spelling 'nere cloying' suggests a pun on 'nearly cloying' = unpleasantly sweet.
- 6 frame my feeding adjust my (social) diet
- 7 welfare being well, being healthy (OED 1a); cf. also the late-medieval sense (OED 3b), 'abundance of meat, drink'; activates the often dormant notion contained in 'farewell'
meetness appropriateness, fittingness
- 8 To be in being
- 9–10 policy . . . assured My (supposed) wise stratagem in our relationship, (adopted) to forestall non-existent evils, produced or led to definite wrongs.
- 11 applied a healthy condition to medical treatment (or vice versa)
- 12 rank of abounding in, (excessively) luxuriant with
- 14 so . . . you became ill in this manner because of you; grew weary of your company. The identification of love with sickness is conventional; cf. Sidney, OA, 41.8.

118

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge;
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge;
Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweetness, 5
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
To be diseased ere that there was true needing.
Thus policy in love, t'anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured, 10
And brought to medicine a healthful state
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured;
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

5 ne'er cloying] nere cloying 7 welfare] wel-fare 8 diseased] diseas'd 10 were not,] were, not

- 119 Building on the last line of the previous sonnet, in which he has been 'poisoned' by his own misguided efforts to maintain the health of his relationship with his friend, the speaker sees himself as maddened and confused, yet, once recovered, strengthened and increased in love.
- 1 siren tears Sirens – for the Elizabethans, more or less synonymous with mermaids – are normally thought of as exercising their fatal enchantments through singing, rather than weeping, though in so far as they are also thought of as serpents, or serpent-like, they might conceivably merge with crocodiles, which certainly were associated with deceptive tears, as in 2H6 3.1.226; Oth 4.1.257. John Dickenson, Greene in Conceit (1598), 48, closely associates sirens' tongues and crocodiles' tears. However, it is possible that Q's 'Syren' additionally or alternatively refers to 'serene' or 'serein', 'A light fall of moisture or fine rain after sunset in hot countries, formerly regarded as a noxious dew or mist' (OED). This, if drunk, would certainly be regarded as toxic, as in Sidney's lines in the double sestina of Strophon and Klaius: 'Meseems I feele the comfort of the morning / Turnde to the mortall serene of an evening' (OA, 71.41–2). Four of the MS texts of Sidney's Old Arcadia spell the word 'Siren', and in one of OED's examples (Moryson, 1617) it is spelt 'Syren'. For a more detailed discussion, see Duncan-Jones, 'Syren teares'.
- 2 limbecks alembics, or gourd-shaped vessels used in distillation, whose beak conveyed vapours to a receiver in which they were condensed (OED)
- 3 Applying administering: continues the sense of medical treatment
- 4 saw . . . win believed myself to be about to conquer, or in process of conquering, my sickness
- 5 cf. Desdemona's 'Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?', Oth 4.2.70, and Othello's interpretation of 'commit' as 'commit (adultery)', as, also, in KL 3.4.80, 'commit not with man's sworn spouse'.
- 6 so blessed never never so blessed; as blessed or happy as can be
- 7 spheres the circuit or celestial location of stars; the round sockets in which eyes are contained
blessed blessèd
fitted forced by fits or paroxysms out of (the usual place), OED fit v.², with this example only. W.N. Lettsom's 'flitted' (Rollins, 1.300–1) would make good sense (cf. OED flit v. 1, 'To remove or transport to another place'), but the fact that Shakespeare does not use this word elsewhere is against it. The concordance of fitted with the sustained disease image of the following line, together with the iteration of the sound in benefit, l. 9, supports Q's reading.
- 8 distraction . . . fever confusion caused by this fever which drives me mad: with distraction cf. TC 5.2.41, 5.3.85; with madding, AW 5.3.212.
- 10 better . . . better That which is better – in the sense of being good, not evil – is always made even better after recovering from an onslaught of evil.
- 11 An adaptation to a building metaphor (identifying love with a ruined house rebuilt) of the popular Latin proverb, derived from Terence by way of Erasmus, amantium irae amoris redintegratio, 'The falling-out of lovers is a renewing of love' (Tilley, F40). The word 'falling-out', used in most English versions of the proverb, may have suggested the idea of love as a collapsing building. Cf. also Richard Edwards's poem elaborating the aphorism in The Paradise of Dainty Devices (1576).
- 13 return . . . content come back, corrected in a way that makes me happy; come back to my happiness, suitably rebuked
- 14 gain . . . spent suggests an allusion both to the idea of the felix culpa or 'fortunate fall' – man's sin which occasioned the Redemption – and to the parable of the talents (Matthew, 25.14–30), in which the servants who have increased their lord's money (possibly by means of usury, which most Elizabethans saw as 'ill') are praised by their master.

119

What potions have I drunk of siren tears
 Distilled from limbecks foul as hell within,
 Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
 Still losing when I saw myself to win?
 What wretched errors hath my heart committed, 5
 Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never?
 How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted
 In the distraction of this madding fever?
 O benefit of ill: now I find true
 That better is by evil still made better, 10
 And ruined love when it is built anew
 Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater:
 So I return rebuked to my content,
 And gain by ill's thrice more than I have spent.

1 siren] Booth; Syren Q; Siren Ard' 2 Distilled] Distil'd limbecks] Lymbecks 7 spheres]
 Spheares 10 is by] is, by 11 ruined] ruin'd 13 rebuked] rebukt 14 ill's] ill Malone

- 120 Reminding himself of how he felt when his friend betrayed him, the speaker finds pain in the recollection of his anguish, but comfort in the thought of his own forgiveness at that time, and hopes to receive equivalent forgiveness himself.
- 1 once unkind unkind to me at some former time; the sonnet appears to refer back to 33–5, especially 34; cf. also 57–8.
- befriends me stands me in good stead; possibly also, 'ensures that I retain your friendship'
- 2 for for the sake of
- 3 my transgression my (own) error, equivalent to your unkindness in the past
- bow bend, submit (myself to shame) (OED 5)
- 4 nerves muscles; that which constitutes strength or energy (OED 1, 2): the sense of 'nerves' as 'feeling' (8b) was rare at this period, but may be present as a subsidiary suggestion.
- 6 hell of time period of hellish emotional torment; cf. 58.13: 'I am to wait, though waiting so be hell'.
- 8 weigh consider, estimate
- 9–10 remembered . . . sense reminded my deepest capacity for feeling, or capacity for deepest feeling
- 11–12 This is most readily understood with reference to 34.7, where the young man has offered to heal his injured friend through the salve of penitent tears: 'I ought to have offered you promptly, as you then offered me, the healing penitence which is what best suits the injured heart.'
- 13–14 The fact that my friend once injured me constitutes payment: the speaker's trespass cancels out that of his friend, and his friend's – he hopes – will cancel out his. Cf. TGV 5.4.75: 'If hearty sorrow / Be a sufficient ransom for offence / I tender it here'. These lines seem again to refer to 34.13–14.

- 121 This sonnet is a reflection on false reputation, and on the corrupted judgements of those who disseminate damaging rumours about the speaker.
- 1 Cf. 'There is small difference to the eye of the world in being nought and being thought so' (Tilley, D336, with this example); however, Shakespeare elaborates the proverb, suggesting that it is actually better to be vile (here more or less synonymous with 'nought', = immoral, vicious, OED 1; cf. also OED vile 1, 'Of actions, character etc., Despicable on moral grounds') than to be falsely thought so.
- 2-3 When . . . lost when the subject of the adjudication of others, though in fact not vile, is blamed for being so, and yet has missed the rightful or legitimate pleasure (that might have accompanied genuine 'vileness')
- 3 which The subject is not clear, but is probably the pleasure wrongly identified by reproachful commentators.
so deemed judged to be (sexual?) pleasure
- 5 adulterate (themselves) defiled with adultery; counterfeit, of base origin (OED 1, 2): the association of eyes with adultery suggests an allusion to the Sermon on the Mount: 'whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart', Matthew, 5.28.
- 6 Give salutation to greet, be familiar with; cf. R3 5.3.210-11, 'The early village cock / Hath twice done salutation to the morn'. The word also suggests an ironical allusion to the Annunciation and the Virgin Mary's anxiety about 'what manner of salutation this should be' when visited by the Angel Gabriel, Luke, 1.29.
my sportive blood my (supposed) propensity to be wanton or out of control; cf. 109.10, 'All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood'.
- 7 frailties moral weaknesses, shortcomings; cf. 2H4 3.3.164-8.
why are why are there frailer spies people, or people's eyes, even more faulty or susceptible than myself
- 8 in their wills 'in their desires or inclinations; with overtones both of sexual desire and of wilfulness' (OED will 2; and cf. 57.13, in your will). Booth (409-10) suggests 'a farfetched pun on "in their Williams"', pointing out the conjunction of wills with I am . . . I am in the following line, yielding a possible play on 'will-I-am'.
- 9 I am . . . am Cf. 'And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you' (Exodus, 3.14). No doubt Shakespeare was aware of the semi-blasphemous effect of the divine self-definition appropriated by a wilful human individual, for he twice put similar statements into the mouth of the demi-devil Richard III: 'I am myself alone', 3H6 5.6.83; and 'Richard loves Richard, that is, I am I', R3 5.3.184 (Folio text). According to Booth (410), the biblical echo makes 'the speaker sound smug, presumptuous and stupid'.
level guess at, aim (weapons) at (OED 8b, 7a)
- 10 abuses misdeeds, injuries (to others)
reckon up enumerate, list
- 11 bevel zigzag (heraldry); oblique (carpentry); an odd word for 'crooked', perhaps chosen both for the rhyme and for its echo of be vile in l. 1
- 12 By according to the estimation or judgement of rank profuse; rotten; sexually uncontrolled; cf. 118.12.
- 13 maintain assert; argue in favour of
- 14 in . . . reign (1) flourish, triumph in their viciousness; or (2) use their own badness as sanction for their pursuit of others; or (3) are governed by their own particular form of badness, as a 'ruling' or 'reigning' passion: (3) is roughly synonymous with Jonson's phrase 'every man in his humour'.

121

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteemed,
When not to be, receives reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost, which is so deemed
Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing.
For why should others' false adulterate eyes 5
Give salutation to my sportive blood?
Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
No, I am that I am, and they that level
At my abuses, reckon up their own; 10
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel.
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown,
Unless this general evil they maintain:
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

7 spies,] spies; 11 themselves] them-selves

- 122 The speaker has parted with a notebook or manuscript volume given him by his friend, but claims that his own memory provides a more lasting memento. The sonnet recalls Ham 1.5.95–110, in which Hamlet needs no external help to retain the memory of his father 'Within the book and volume of my brain', but turns to his tables to note down the smiling villainy of Claudius. Cf. also 77, in which the poet appears to give the young man a book with vacant leaves for him to write in.
- 1 tables either 'A small portable tablet for writing upon, especially for notes or memoranda' (OED table 2b) or, more probably, synonymous here with 'table-book', a pocket notebook, as in 2H4 2.4.264.
- 1–2 are . . . memory This can be read as suggesting either that the notebook itself was Full characterized, that is, amply inscribed, and that its contents are firmly lodged in the speaker's mind; or that, though the notebook itself is blank, in the speaker's memory it is Full characterized – amply written on – with recollections of the donor. For 'character' = write, see 108.1.
- 3 Which can refer either to the tables or to their imagined or actual contents that idle rank that worthless row or level (of other persons or writings); perhaps comparable with the 'trivial fond records' which Hamlet expunges from his memory in favour of recollection of his father's ghost
- 4 all date all limit or end of a period of time (OED date 5); cf. 14.14 and 30.6.
- 5–6 so . . . subsist At first this may seem to revert to the theme of the youth's immortality, suggesting, like 18.13–14, that the poet's thoughts, articulated in verse, will ensure that he lives as long as human faculties survive in the world. However, the sestet makes it clear that the focus is here on the speaker's own brain and heart only, not on their representation in words.
- 6 faculty capability, power, with perhaps some reference to the specialized application of the word to 'One of the several "powers" of the mind, will, the reason, memory' (OED 3, 4)
- 7 razed oblivion oblivion which causes mental images to be razed, or eradicated
- 8 thy record the recollection or documentation of you: OED record n. 7, 5a; cf. also TN 5.1.253, Son 55.8 missed lost, missing
- 9 That poor retention the notebook, a feeble means, compared with the brain, of 'retaining' the image of the beloved
- 10 tallies . . . score physical objects on which to measure and record the value of your love, which is so precious as to be immeasurable: a 'tally' was a stick on which the amount of a debt or payment was marked, or 'scored', with notches; cf. OED tally 1, 2a; score 10c; also 2H6 4.7.32–3, 'our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally'.
- 11 give . . . me give them (it) away
- 12 those tables the tables of memory, as in Ham 1.5.98
- 13 adjunct something additional or auxiliary (OED 1); cf. LLL 4.3.314, 'Learning is but an adjunct to our self'.
- 14 import imply, betoken (OED 5a, b) forgetfulness a poor memory, a tendency to forget

- 123 Building on his claim in the preceding sonnet that his own steadfast love provides a better bulwark against oblivion than any physical object can do, the speaker now defies time and pours scorn on the physical monuments of the past, or reminiscent of the past, rephrasing the claim made in 116.9 that 'Love's not Time's fool'. Sonnets 123–5 can be read as three comments on the 'wonderful year' 1603–4, during which many poets wrote tributes to James I, but Shakespeare did not; see Introduction, p. 26.
- 1 boast brag triumphantly; cf. 86.11.
- 2 pyramids tall structures with a sloping-sided apex, possibly in the form of what would now be called an obelisk or steeple (OED 3). The obelisks which adorned the triumphal arches built to greet James I in the the City of London on 15 March 1603/4 were described as pyramids; cf. Stephen Harrison, The Arch's of Triumph (1604), D1^r, E1^r, F1^r. Shakespeare's refusal to be impressed by pyramids, old or new, is suggested by his two references to them in AC, especially the gullible Lepidus' drunken reflection: 'Nay, certainly, I have heard that the Ptolomies' pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction I have heard that' (AC 2.7.33–5; cf. also 5.2.61).
built . . . might constructed with strength more recent (than that which built the pyramids of antiquity); perhaps there is also a sense of 'using more recent technology'.
- 3 nothing novel . . . strange in no way new or extraordinary; alternatively, nothing can be read as a noun, = no new or extraordinary thing; novel (OED sb. 1) was a regular word for 'a novelty'.
- 4 dressings . . . sight reworkings or adornments of something seen before (cf. MM 5.1.59)
- 5 Our dates the limits of our lives; cf. 38.12, 122.4; for the idea, cf. Sidney, OA, 75.91, 'we last short while, and build long lasting places'.
- 6 admire marvel at foist upon us palm off on us, fasten on us unwarrantably (OED foist 3c, a term from cheating with dice)
- 7 make them make them out to be, claim them as born . . . desire brought into being to satisfy our wishes: though Q's 'borne' could be left so spelt and construed as 'brought, conveyed', born applies better to monuments apparently newly created.
- 8 Than think than cause or allow us to think heard them told heard them mentioned, with perhaps some sense also of itemized, described (OED tell 1–3, 21).
- 9 registers records, chronicles (OED 1–2): suggests both written documents and monuments like the pyramids: cf. LC 52, and the use of register in a similar context, but as a verb, in 108.3.
both applies presumably to 'Thy registers and thee', not to defy defy despise, challenge; cf. Romeo's and Hamlet's defiance of providence, RJ 5.1.24, Ham 5.2.211.
- 11 For thy records suggests both '(not wondering) . . . at your records', and 'for your records are . . . (made more or less)'.
records records
what . . . lie that which lies before our eyes; what, as we see, is lying or deceptive
- 12 Because time moves so fast, the registers or records he leaves are constantly altered, either actually, through physical erosion, or apparently, through changing temporal viewpoints.
- 14 thy . . . thee While time's attempts to daunt mankind through created monuments, such as pyramids or registers, have been challenged in the first twelve lines, we are now reminded of time's conventional image as a destructive mower-down of men, as in 12.13 and 60.12. Booth (418–19) suggests that scythe may have been heard as a pun on sight, which is attractive because of the emphasis in l. 11 on what we see.

123

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change;
 Thy pyramids, built up with newer might,
 To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
 They are but dressings of a former sight:
 Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire 5
 What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
 And rather make them born to our desire
 Than think that we before have heard them told:
 Thy registers and thee I both defy,
 Not wond'ring at the present, nor the past, 10
 For thy records, and what we see doth lie,
 Made more or less by thy continual haste:
 This I do vow, and this shall ever be,
 I will be true despite thy scythe and thee.

1 No! Time,] Q: No, Time, Ard': No, time, Capell 7 born] borne 14 scythe] syeth

- 124 Continuing from the previous sonnet the notion of his love as transcending the operation of time, the speaker contrasts its constancy with the vacillating fortunes of those who are subject to political control and therefore vulnerable to sudden changes of government.
- 1 my dear love the love which is so precious to me, and so strongly felt: It in the following line indicates that the reference here is to the affection located in the speaker, rather than its object.
child of state derived from or dependent on the state, or 'the product of circumstances' (Booth, 419)
- 2 for . . . unfathered be rejected or disallowed, as the dubiously legitimate product of changed or changeable forces: readers in 1609 might recall that both the long-reigning and lately dead Elizabeth and her sister Mary had been declared illegitimate by their father in 1536; and theatre-goers might be reminded of Lear's rejection of Cordelia, his 'sometime daughter', now 'stranger'd with our oath', KL 1.1.108ff. OED points out an earlier use of unfathered as 'deprived of a father, made fatherless' in Sidney's NA, 403.
- 3 time's love . . . hate Time is here used, as in 76.3, to suggest 'the present time, currently prevailing ideas' (OED 3a): love which was merely a child of state would be at the mercy of what was in fashion.
- 4 When out of fashion, his love would take its place among despised weeds; when in favour, among flowers subject to being plucked; in either case at risk of destruction. The word gathered has strong biblical associations with death, as in the accounts in Genesis of Abraham being 'gathered to his people', 25.8; cf. also 49.29, 33; Numbers, 20.24, 27.13; Isaiah, 27.12.
- 4-8 While previous commentators, such as Ingram and Redpath and Booth, have seen a polarity between good and ill fortune for the love which is the child of state, I think, rather, that the suggestion is that to be subjected to either is damaging, whether as a spurned weed or a plucked flower, an obedient subject to smilingly false authority or a punished dissident.
- 5 builed . . . accident established in a place far removed from the vagaries of fortune; cf. time's millioned accidents, 115.5.
- 6 suffers . . . pomp does not endure pain, or acquiesce in whatever is required (OED suffer 3, 13a), in periods when it is subject to fortunate authority: smiling may here suggest not so much the propitious benevolence of smiling Fortune as the dangerously malign hypocrisy of a tyrant like Claudius who demonstrates 'That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain', Ham 1.5.8.
- 6-7 falls . . . discontent collapses under the oppression or imprisonment inflicted on those who resist current authority: thralled (thralled) is cited by Abbott, par. 374, as one of the 'passive participles . . . used as epithets to describe the state which would be the result of the active verb'. Discontented subjects are punished by being thralled, imprisoned or enslaved.
- 8 A puzzling line, partly because the referent of Whereto is not clear: perhaps the suggestion is that – for those of us whose love is the child of state – time summons us to a form of behaviour – our fashion – which leads inevitably to the suffering or thralldom defined in the previous two lines; alternatively, fashion may be the subject of calls, and th'inviting time the object. Ingram and Redpath gloss 'To which the temptations of today expose the likes of me', defending their rendering of our fashion as 'the likes of me' with reference to TGV 5.4.61 (IR); but this seems counter to the wider suggestion that the speaker and his love are not subject to the timebound perils that beset dependents on the state.
- 9 policy expediency, political cunning, dissimulation (OED 3, 4a): for the adverse, Machiavellian connotations

124

If my dear love were but the child of state
 It might, for fortune's bastard, be unfathered,
 As subject to time's love or to time's hate,
 Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gathered.

No, it was builded far from accident; 5
 It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
 Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
 Whereto th'inviting time our fashion calls:
 It fears not policy, that heretic,
 Which works on leases of short-numbered hours, 10
 But all alone stands hugely politic,
 That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.
 To this I witness call the fools of time,
 Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

of the word, cf. Tim 3.2.88–9: 'Men must learn now with pity to dispense, / For policy sits above conscience'; cf. also 'Policy with his long nails has almost scratched out the eyes of religion', Tilley, P463.

heretic religious dissident, or 'one who maintains opinions upon any subject at variance with those generally received or considered authoritative' (OED 1, 2). As the previous note shows, policy in its adverse sense was seen as opposed to religious and ethical values, so the image of policy as itself a heretic underlines the speaker's definition of an independent value-system.

10 which operates in terms of limited periods of time measured by conventional units: short-numbered hours suggests hours which are both short and few in number. There may be some connection between the image of fast-moving cycles of (twenty-four) hours and the number of the sonnet; cf. 12 headnote.

1 If] Yf 4 gathered] gatherd 8 our] or Capell 9 heretic] Heriticke 10 short-numbered hours] short numbred howers 13 fools] foles 14 lived] liu'd

- 11 hugely politic enormously wise, prudent: after the adverse connotations of policy only two lines earlier, the speaker's claim for his own politic power is disconcerting.
- 12 That so that
nor . . . nor neither . . . nor: the indication that both poles of variation to which other kinds of love are subject are threatening confirms the reading of ll. 4–8 as presenting unpleasant alternatives.
- 13 To . . . call to testify to what I claim, I summon fools of time presumably, 'those whose love is determined by and subject to particular political circumstance', unlike the true love defined in 116, which is not Time's fool. Here fool = plaything, dupe (OED 3).
- 14 presumably, 'who are regarded as martyrs when they die, but as wrongdoers while they live'. This has often been seen as referring to Catholics executed for their faith, and could be applied to many such episodes, the most recent and spectacular being the Gunpowder Plot of 1605, followed by the trial and execution of the conspirators in January 1606. However, the words could refer almost equally well to various other eminent figures who were celebrated at the time of their death or soon after, such as Mary, Queen of Scots, or the Earl of Essex.

124

If my dear love were but the child of state
It might, for fortune's bastard, be unfathered,
As subject to time's love or to time's hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gathered.
No, it was builded far from accident; 5
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
Whereto th'inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short-numbered hours, 10
But all alone stands hugely politic,
That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.
To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

- 125 Continuing to define a space for his love as separate from, and more lasting than, political structures and the public ceremonial that expresses them, the speaker defends the pure simplicity of his love as the best bastion against the assaults of time.
- 1 Were't . . . me would it signify anything to me, what value would it have for me?
bore the canopy carried a ceremonial canopy over a monarch or great person in procession (OED canopy 1a): the word's strong association with monarchy is suggested by Henry VI's meditation, 3H6 2.5.42–5: 'Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade / To shepherds looking on their silly sheep, / Than doth a rich embroidered canopy / To kings that fear their subjects' treachery?' If there is a specific allusion here, James I's triumphal procession through London seems, as in 123, the most likely.
- 2 honouring exterior (displays of power) with my own exterior (appearance): for another use of extern in OED's sense 1, 'pertaining to or connected with the outside', cf. Oth 1.1.63.
- 3 bases probably bases (foundations) for columns or pyramids, as in 123.1–2 for eternity to support or celebrate eternity; (supposedly) to last for ever
- 4 which (though designated eternity) turns out in the event to last no longer than onslaught and decay permit; therefore, paradoxically, ruining is more durable than eternity.
- 5 Have . . . seen While ll. 3–4 suggest a long historical perspective in which ruined physical monuments of the past testify to the frailty of human attempts to create something lasting, the speaker now limits himself to his own memory and his experience of mutability in the sphere of courtly ambition.
dwellers . . . favour those preoccupied with outward beauty or ceremonial and the favour of the great and powerful: cf. RJ 2.2.288, 'Fain would I dwell on form', where Juliet wishes to stay within the bounds of courtly behaviour.
- 6 paying . . . rent paying too high a price: recalls the 'leases of short-numbered hours' in 124.10
- 7 neglecting simple tastes for the sake of a sweet (by implication, rich and unwholesome) mingling of flavours: in culinary terms, compound sweet suggests the tarts and sweetmeats served at aristocratic banquets, in contrast with the plain ingredients consumed by the common people. Cf. the proverbial 'Things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour' (R2 1.3.236; Tilley, M1265), which derives from Revelation, 10.9–10. It is tempting also to find in compound sweet a reference to the Earl of Essex, who as a young courtier was rewarded, c. 1590, with 'the farm of sweet wines' – the right to charge tax on all imported sweet wine – but lost it in September 1600 after his unlicensed return from Ireland, and was executed for his failed coup in February 1601; see Introduction, pp. 27–8.
- 8 pitiable (or contemptible) aspirants after success, or individuals who thrive poorly, who in their steadfast gazing (on form and favour) are destroyed: suggests an allusion to being blinded by looking directly at the sun, which could supposedly be done with impunity only by an eagle (cf. 3H6 2.1.91–2). This, too, would apply aptly to Essex, who on his return from Ireland burst in on the undressed Queen in her bedchamber.
- 9 obsequious obedient, dutiful, especially with reference to the dead and their funeral 'obsequies' (OED 1a, b): the word may subliminally prepare the reader for the anticipation of the youth's death in the next poem.
- 10 oblation offering, especially in a religious context, as in the offering of sacramental bread and wine to God (OED 2, 3) poor but free applies both to the oblation, simple but freely, generously given, and to the speaker, who is poor

125

Were't ought to me I bore the canopy,
 With my extern the outward honouring,
 Or laid great bases for eternity,
 Which proves more short than waste or ruining?
 Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour 5
 Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent,
 For compound sweet forgoing simple savour,
 Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
 No, let me be obsequious in thy heart,
 And take thou my oblation, poor but free, 10
 Which is not mixed with seconds, knows no art,
 But mutual render, only me for thee.
 Hence, thou suborned informer, a true soul
 When most impeached, stands least in thy control.

but free from courtly subservience

- 11 seconds material, e.g. flour, grapes, of secondary or inferior quality (OED 5)
knows no art is not experienced in any artful mingling of elements, or courtly wiles 12 render surrender, making over to another (OED n. 2, with this example)
 13 suborned informer bribed false witness, hired spy. Previous commentators have taken the phrase to refer cryptically to some 'actual' individual, but most probably the reference is to

Time, the explicit addressee of sonnets 123–5: cf. VA 655, where jealousy is described as a 'sour informer'. Here, Time is seen as the false witness who claims that the speaker is in his power by 'boasting' of his change (123.1).

- 14 impeached challenged, disparaged; accused of treason or other major crime (OED 3, 5): cf. also MND 2.1.214, for an instance of 'impeach' = jeopardize, put at risk.

7 sweet forgoing] sweet; Forgoing 11 mixed] mixt 13 suborned informer] subbornd Informer
 14 impeached] impeacht

- 126 This six-couplet poem marks the completion of the 'fair youth' sequence. The young man's power over time is shown as bestowed on him by his patroness, nature, who must eventually hand him over (to decay and death). The number six, associated with perfection that is merely human, not divine (cf. Philo Judaeus quoted by Hopper, 47–8), and with the dreaded Beast of Revelation (cf. 66 headnote) is signalled both by the six-couplet verse form and by the figure at the head of the poem, which may be construed as 12/6. As 63×2 it suggests the completion of two 'grand climacterics', shadowing the deaths of both poet and youth (see Introduction, p. 100).
- 1 my lovely Boy Though some commentators have identified the lovely Boy with Cupid, the context makes it clear that the addressee is the speaker's beloved, and a mortal, not a deity. In 108.5 the youth had been addressed as sweet boy. The phrase caused embarrassment to Sidney Lee and others; yet compare Richard Barnfield's The Affectionate Shepherd (1594), 11–12: 'If it be sinne to love a lovely Lad; / Oh then sinne I, for whom my soule is sad'.
in thy power The youth's alleged power over time is presumably contrasted with the limited control over love exercised by the suborned informer, Time, at the end of 125; cf. also 20.7, 'all hues in his controlling'.
- 2 fickle glass presumably the hourglass traditionally held by personified Time, which is fickle because the sands perpetually trickling down mark time's inexorable movement, causing it to be changeable, unreliable (OED fickle, with this example) his sickle hour It seems initially tempting to follow Bernard Lintott and others (Rollins, 1.319–21) in emending Q's sickle to 'fickle', especially since the 'fi' and 'si' ligatures in Q are almost identical (see for instance the second sins in 35.8), and a compositor might readily pick up one in error for the other: the sense would be 'his fickle hour (-glass)'. However, on the difficilior lectio principle it is preferable to retain sickle, construed as an adjectival noun: 'the hour when Time's (=death's) sickle cuts off life'. In 116.10 the speaker had proclaimed love's ability to stand out of reach of Time's bending sickle's compass; and The unique phrase sickle hour – time of harvest, when ripe corn is cut – matches the field of imagery of waning, withering and 'growing' in the next two lines. The youth, though growing, has the ability to hold back or defer the moment of harvest when what is fully ripe is reaped with a sickle.
- 3 Who . . . grown who, through the waning or diminution of time, has grown (to maturity or beyond): there may be a suggestion both of the waning hourglass with its descending grains of sand, and of a waning moon, visually prefigured in his sickle hour, the hour when the moon is diminished to a slender sickle; and an additional play on 'waning', often in this period spelt 'wayning' or 'waning' (cf. OED's example from Foxe) and probably identical in sound.
- 4 The same process which brings the youth to perfection brings the speaker to decay. Q's 'louers' permits modernization as 'lovers', = the withering of all those who love you; but the proprietorial and singular claim of 'O thou my lovely Boy' tips the balance in favour of the singular lover's as predominant.
- 5 sovereign . . . wrack supreme or paramount ruler over destruction, or over the destructive processes of time (cf. OED wrack 2b); in the context of love and loveliness, there is also an implication that nature is a supreme mistress, Venus-like, in a sexual sense.
- 6 As you move forward (into maturity) she continually pulls you, or desires (will) to pull you back (from decay): the image of nature, personified here as a mature woman devoted to a fair youth, 'plucking' him back from the

126

O thou my lovely Boy, who in thy power
 Dost hold time's fickle glass, his sickle hour,
 Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
 Thy lover's withering, as thy sweet self grow'st;
 If nature, sovereign mistress over wrack, 5
 As thou goest onwards still will pluck thee back,
 She keeps thee to this purpose: that her skill
 May time disgrace, and wretched minute kill.
 Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure:
 She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure! 10
 Her audit, though delayed, answered must be,
 And her quietus is to render thee.

()
 ()

jaws of destruction recalls the myth of the nymph Thetis, who tried to preserve her son Achilles from mortality by plunging him in the river Styx, holding him back by the heel.

7 keeps holds, retains; preserves, cares for (you) (OED 16–20)

her skill her skill in maintaining your youthful appearance and apparent invulnerability to decay

8 time disgrace put time to shame by eclipsing or outdoing him (OED disgrace v.2); perhaps with an additional suggestion that the boy's beauty (grace) makes Old Father Time look ugly wretched minute kill destroy that hateful unit of time which, by its relentless repetition, brings mortal beings to their destruction. It is surprising that so many editors, including Kerrigan, emend to 'minutes', for 'wretched minutes', like the 'damned minutes' endured by the jealous husband in Oth 3.3.173, would be tedious, unpleasant minutes, better

126] sonnet omitted by Benson 2 sickle hour,] IR; sickle, hower: Q: sickle, hour; *Ard*¹; sickle-hour; Oxf; fickle hour: *Cam*² (Lintott) 5 nature, sovereign mistress . . . wrack,] Nature (soueraine misteres . . . wrack) 7 skill] skill. 8 minute] mynuit Q; minutes Capell 11 audit, though delayed,] Audite (though delayd) answerd] answer'd 12 quietus] Quietus killed off than experienced, thus trivializing what is claimed here for nature. She is surely not trying merely to 'kill time', in the sense of expunging tedious minutes in favour of enjoyable ones, but attempting to challenge time's power in an absolute sense. As Booth (433) points out, the singular minute 'appears in company with the curious use of hour in line 2'. In addition, in Q's spelling, 'mynuit' may operate as a visual pun on Fr. minuit, midnight, suggesting that nature seeks to cancel the wretchedness of the midnight hour so often associated with death, despair and the expiry of legal contracts, as in Marlowe's Doctor Faustus, 19.137.

- 9 Yet fear her In spite of what I have just said, you should fear her: although this poem is not a sonnet, the sense of a break and a modified viewpoint after the first eight lines – as if they were an octave – is here strongly marked.

O . . . pleasure recalls and redefines the opening phrase: the youth is in nature's possession, not just the speaker's, and as 'nature's darling' is subject to the adverse as well as positive aspects of her pleasure, as in the sense of doing something 'at pleasure', or when one pleases (OED pleasure 5b). The word minion also, in addition to its ironical or contemptuous associations, suggests one vulnerable because exclusively dependent on the favour of a sovereign or great person (OED 1a, b, c).

- 10 detain keep back, restrain from (delivery to time) (OED 4, 5) still keep retain always; retain in a motionless state, unaltered by time
- 11 audit summons to a final statement (literally, 'hearing') of accounts, in which nature must settle her score with time: underlying ll. 11–12 is the commonplace image of death as payment of a 'debt to nature', Tilley, D168; and cf. IH4 5.1.126–8: 'Prince.

Why, thou owest God a death. / Falstaff. 'Tis not due yet, I would be loath to pay him before his day'.

answered satisfied, made good; cf. IH4 1.3.183–4: 'To answer all the debt he owes to you, / Even with the bloody payment of your deaths'.

- 12 The method by which nature is obliged to acquit herself of debt is by handing you over in payment (cf. OED render 11): for quietus, clearing of accounts, as an image of death, cf. Ham 3.1.75. Though ll. 11–12 make a perfectly complete sentence, they leave the reader with a sense of incompleteness or sudden ending, which is reinforced by the empty parentheses which follow, as if they figure the emptiness which will ensue – 'The rest is silence' (Ham 5.2.363). The parentheses themselves, omitted in all previous modernized editions, not only mark off the end of the 'fair youth' sequence, but suggest a range of apt significances. They resemble marks in an account-book enclosing the final sum, but empty. As Graziani has pointed out, they sketch out the shape of an hourglass, but one that contains no sand; and as Lennard (41–3) has suggested, the round brackets or lunulae, little moons, image a repeated waxing and waning of the moon, pointing to fickleness and frailty. Lennard sees the spaces as representing 'either the silence (quiet) of the grave, or the empty grave into which the corpse of the louely Boy must sooner or later fall'. Also, since these brackets enclose an expected couplet, they may image a failure to 'couple'. The poet had warned the youth in 8.14 that 'Thou single wilt prove none': unless he 'couples' himself in marriage, he will fail to preserve his beauty for posterity. Even the poet's black lines (63.13) are finally missing. The poet's verse is incomplete, and so is the youth's life.

126

O thou my lovely Boy, who in thy power
Dost hold time's fickle glass, his sickle hour,
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lover's withering, as thy sweet self grow'st;
If nature, sovereign mistress over wrack, 5
As thou goest onwards still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose: that her skill
May time disgrace, and wretched minute kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure:
She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure! 10
Her audit, though delayed, answered must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

()
()

- 127 Initiating the 'dark lady' sequence, the speaker claims that 'fairness' of complexion is no longer esteemed, since it can be falsely appropriated by means of cosmetics; fashionably, therefore, he rejoices in a mistress with dark eyes (by implication, dark complexion), whose eyes seem to mourn in mocking regret for the false reputation for beauty enjoyed by other women, while asserting their own aesthetic superiority.
- 1 the old age former times: although, as Ingram and Redpath point out, this is 'not necessarily a long time ago' (IR, 290), there must be some suggestion of the Golden Age, a time when ideals were fully realized, as in the 'antique world' recalled by Adam's generous faithfulness in AYL 2.3.57.
- black . . . fair a dark (complexion) was not adjudged to be blonde (beautiful): the paradoxical assertion that what is black (dark) is now regarded as fair (light) identifies this sonnet, like 130 and 132, as a conceited exercise in mock-eccomium.
- 2 presumably, 'if dark was adjudged to be light (in those days), it still was not described as beautiful': the concession may be that though some dark complexions were admired in the past, they were not celebrated in language, poetic or otherwise.
- 3 black blackness (of complexion)
beauty's successive heir the (legitimate) heir to beauty, or inheritor of beauty
- 4 beauty . . . shame What used to be called beauty – a 'fair complexion' – has acquired a bad reputation through the imputation of falseness, which excludes it from the inheritance of beauty.
- 5 since since (the time when); because each . . . power each and every hand can assume the power (to fashion beauty) that originally belonged to nature alone
- 6 Fairing the foul beautifying the ugly; for 'fair' as a verb cf. OED 2, with this example; also unfair, = 'deprive of beauty', 5.4.
- art's . . . face the falsely appropriated face or appearance created by artifice
- 7 hath no name is not verbally identified as beauty, as in l. 1; has no legitimate inheritance, as in l. 4; has no eminence or reputation: cf. OED name 5b, 'of no name, implying obscurity and unimportance', exemplified in Job 30.8; and cf. H5 4.8.107.
- 8 is made commonplace, not sacred, or even lives in disgrace: though as Booth (435–6) points out, such a simplistic summary does not do justice to this sonnet's syntactic and semantic complexities, which aptly mirror 'false identities that pass for real and real ones that seem false'.
- 9 suggests either that, in order to be in tune with the times, the speaker has selected a black-eyed mistress; or, more fantastically, that his mistress has chosen her own fashionable eye-colour
- 10 Her . . . suited Though the overwhelming majority of editors have felt the repetition of eyes to be an error, and have either emended the eyes of the previous lines or these ones, to introduce an allusion to some other part of the mistress's appearance, Q's text makes perfectly good sense. The speaker's mistress's eyes are, in respect of their blackness (so), well matched both to the present age and to each other. To add some other part – 'brow', 'hair' or whatever – multiplies the number of mourners in the next phrase, so confusing the otherwise consistent use of anatomical synecdoche: eyes alone figure the mistress's beauty, just as in l. 5 hand figures all the agents of artificial beauty, and in the final line tongue represents a multitude of commentators.
- mourners Cf. Sidney's AS, 7, on the blackness of Stella's eyes, which concludes that she chooses to dress 'Love' (Cupid) in 'mourning weed, / To honour all their deaths, who for her bleed'. The mistress's 'mourning' here includes a sense of 'deplore' or 'regret', as in OED's sense 5; and cf. Oth 1.3.204.

127

In the old age black was not counted fair,
 Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
 But now is black beauty's successive heir,
 And beauty slandered with a bastard shame:
 For since each hand hath put on nature's power, 5
 Fairing the foul with art's false borrowed face,
 Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
 But is profaned, if not lives in disgrace.
 Therefore my mistress' eyes are raven black,
 Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem 10
 At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
 Sland'ring creation with a false esteem;
 Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
 That every tongue says beauty should look so.

11–12 (lamenting or deploring) those (women) not naturally beautiful, but amply furnished with artificial beauty, who give natural beauty, or nature itself (creation), a bad name by being judged as beautiful on the basis of false appearance. This 'mourning' seems to contain an element of triumphant mockery: the poet's mistress's eyes are at least genuine.

13 becoming . . . woe assuming their mourning black in a manner which 'becomes' them, makes them appear beautiful

14 so that everyone now agrees that (true) beauty should look as the mistress's black eyes do: completes the process initiated in ll. 1–4 by which black beauty replaces fairness

4 beauty slandered] Beautie slanderd 5 nature's] Natures 6 art's] Arts borrowed] borrow'd 8 profaned] prophan'd 9 mistress'] Misterse raven] Rauen 10 eyes] hairs Capell; brow IR;
 brows Kerrigan 11 born] borne 12 creation] Creation

- 128 Using the popular conceit of erotic empathy with an object close to the mistress, the speaker contemplates his mistress playing the virginals, envying the instrument its physical contact with her. As Herford and Simpson point out (Jonson, 9.461), 'it was a stale lover's conceit', satirized by Marston in The Scourge of Villanie (1598), 8.117–37, as well as by Jonson in his attribution of it to the affected courtier Fastidious Briske, who wishes to be his mistress's viol, Every Man Out of his Humour, 3.9.101–6. The Jonson analogy, originally proposed by Gerald Massey, but scorned by R. M. Alden and Rollins (Rollins, 1.326–7), seems nevertheless apt. Though Shakespeare had used a version of the conceit without apparent irony in Tit 2.4.44–6, he may here be satirizing it, for the reader of Son, if not for the imagined mistress. For an early MS transcription, see Appendix, p. 466.
- 1 thou . . . play'st you, who are my music, or highest, most harmonious delight, play music: the rhetorical trope (identified by Booth, 439, as antistasis, repetition of a word in a different sense) alerts the reader to the conspicuously 'conceited' character of the sonnet.
- 2–3 whose . . . fingers which is made to move, and consequently to resound, by your sweet fingers
- 3 sway'st wield, manipulate, perhaps with some sense of undulation (OED sway 8b, with this example)
- 4 wiry . . . confounds the harmony produced by plucked wires which (pleasingly) confuses my ear: cf. the 'musical confusion' of Theseus' dogs, MND 1.1.149.
- 5 envy pronounced envÿ (rhyming with 'die').
- jacks Strictly speaking these should refer to pieces of wood 'fixed to the back of the key-lever, and fitted with a quill which plucked the string as the jack rose on the key's being pressed down' (OED); however, it seems that these objects are in direct contact with the woman's fingers, and OED is probably right in suggesting that Shakespeare erroneously applies the word to the keys. The word also evokes a 'knave' or 'ill-bred fellow' (OED 2a, b), personifying the keys as unworthy sexual rivals. It has not been established whether the expression 'nimble Jack', or 'Jack be nimble', was yet current.
- 6 tender . . . hand The palm of the hand was especially associated with erotic intimacy, as in Oth 2.1.168, 251–2; WT 1.2.125–6.
- 7 harvest harvest (of kisses), abundance of kisses
- 8 by . . . stand The conceit that the speaker's lips stand motionless blushing at the sauciness of the virginals parallels that of the mistress's eyes as mourners for made-up women in 127.10.
- 9 tickled Cf. Fastidious Briske (with tobacco-taking parenthesis) on Saviolina and her viol: 'Oh, shee tickles it so, that (Tab.) shee makes it laugh most divinely', Jonson, Every Man Out of his Humour, 3.9.101–3. would perhaps punning on 'wood': the lips desire to be 'wood', not flesh
- 9–10 change . . . situation change their state from flesh to wood; their situation from distance to the proximity enjoyed by the jacks
- 10 chips according to OED 1a, 'unless otherwise specified, understood to be of wood'
- 11, 14 thy fingers two more of Q's 'their'/'thy' errors: cf. 26.12 and n.

- 129 This poem contrasts the moral and physical effects of lust in action with the anticipated pleasure that compels men to pursue it, casting a retrospective light back on the two preceding sonnets, as possibly untrustworthy eulogies by a lust-driven lover.
- 1–2 Th'expense . . . action Sexual intercourse (lust in action) is the (ultimate) means of squandering energy and becoming morally compromised: physical as well as moral degradation is suggested, spirit alluding both to semen as a 'vital spirit' and to the soul or higher part of man (OED 16a, 1a), and waste of shame both to 'shameful waste' and to 'an action that isn't worth the shame it entails' (Booth, 443); waste of shame also suggests 'waste place possessed by shame'; cf. wastes of time, 12.10. There is additionally an association of sexual emission with failing eyesight: cf. Bacon, Sylva Sylvarum (1627), sect. 693: 'It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight . . . the cause of dimness of sight . . . is the expence of spirits'. If this association is activated, it subverts the encomia of 'black beauty' in surrounding sonnets, for the speaker's eyesight may have been damaged by sexual activity.
- 3 Is perjured breaks promises (presumably those made to the love-object) bloody brutal blame blameworthiness, culpability (OED 3)
- 4, 10 extreme intense, excessive (in desire), possibly with shades of 'severe, harsh' (OED 4e, citing Psalms 129.3, Coverdale Bible).
- 4 rude unmannerly, violent not to trust not to be trusted; untrustworthy
- 5 Enjoyed often used with reference to sexual fruition, as in Tit 2.3.134–5, KL 5.3.79; see also Partridge, 107–8. In Q's spelling the word chimes with the in . . . phrases in ll. 1, 2, 9, 10, 11.
despised despised
- 6 had sexually possessed; cf. R3 1.2.228–30.
- 7 a swallowed bait The lust-driven man, who appeared to be 'hunting' his prey, is himself caught like a fish; cf. Cleopatra's fancy of catching fish: 'and as I draw them up, / I'll think them every one an Antony, / And say, "Ah ha! y'are caught"' (AC 2.5.12–14).
- 8–9 mad; / Mad Q's 'Made' may be an accurate compositorial reading of copy which could be construed, in original spelling, as either 'mad' or 'made'. But since emphatic repetition is a feature of this sonnet (cf. action . . . action, in 2; Past reason . . . Past reason, 6–7; extreme . . . extreme, 4, 10; well . . . well, 13), the context seems to favour 'mad' as the dominant sense, with a subsidiary sense of 'made mad'. The two words were similar enough in sound to be punned on, as in TN 3.4.50–3.
- 9 so equally so; as mad in possession of the sexual love-object as in pursuit of it: the portmanteau use of so here is similar to that in so suited in 127.9
- 11 A . . . proof an intense pleasure while it is being experienced or tried out; cf. OED proof 4a; RJ 1.1.166–7: 'Alas that love so gentle in his view / Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof'. Cf. also KL 4.6.187.
proved . . . woe a truly wretched state once the experience is complete: this line, and the sonnet as a whole, may bear some reference to the post-classical tag Post coitum omne animal triste ('After coition, every creature is sad'; ODQ). Also, as Booth (446) points out, puns on 'woman' as 'woe (to) man' were common in the period; and cf. Tilley, W656, 'Woman is the woe of man.' Q's and may derive from 'a' read as an ampersand, or from attraction from the previous and. The capitalized 'In' in l. 9 suggests that the compositor's concentration was poor at this point.
- 12 a dream Cf. Tarquin's anguished anticipation of rape: 'What win I if I gain the thing I seek? / A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy' (Luc 211–12).

129

Th'expense of spirit in a waste of shame
 Is lust in action; and till action, lust
 Is perjured, murd'rous, bloody, full of blame,
 Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
 Enjoyed no sooner but despised straight; 5
 Past reason hunted, and no sooner had,
 Past reason hated as a swallowed bait,
 On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
 Mad in pursuit, and in possession so,
 Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme; 10
 A bliss in proof, and proved, a very woe;
 Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
 All this the world well knows, yet none knows well
 To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

- 13 the world probably, as the following line suggests, = all male persons in the world 14 heaven the bliss of l. 11; perhaps also, women's 'heavenly' beauty this hell the hell of shame and hatred described in the preceding lines; the female sex organ: the identification of hell with the vagina is made in Boccaccio's Decameron, 3.10; and cf. 144.12 and KL 4.6.129.

1 spirit] Spirit 3 perjured] periurd 5 Enjoyed] Inioyd 9 Mad in] Malone; Made In Q
 11 proved, a] Malone; proud and Q 12 proposed] proposd

- 130 As in the sestet of 127, the speaker boasts defiantly of his mistress's dark colouring and lack of the conventional attributes of female beauty. Following immediately on his analysis of the driving force of male lust, this may suggest that the traditional forms of beauty celebrated in love poetry are unnecessary to provoke desire: all that is necessary is that the object of desire is female and available. This strongly parallels Touchstone's wooing of the honestly ugly and wanton Audrey, AYL 3.3.1–57.
- 1 My Both here and in l. 12, it seems that My should receive strong emphasis: the speaker is distinguishing himself from the majority of other love poets: contrast, for instance Sidney's AS, 8.9, praising Stella's 'faire skin, beamy eyes, like morning sun on snow'. Rollins compares Poems, Written by the . . . Earl of Pembroke (1660), sig. D4: 'One Sun alone moves in the skye, / Two Suns thou hast, one in each eye; / Onely by day that sun gives light, / Where thine doth rise, there is no night'. nothing like the sun in no way resembling the sun: cf. the similarly adverbial nothing in 123.3.
- 2 Cf. TS 1.1.129, 'I saw her coral lips to move'; VA 542, 'That sweet coral mouth'; Luc 420, 'her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin'; also Richard Barnfield, Cynthia, With Certaine Sonnets (1595), sonnet 17.12, 'His teeth pure Pearle in blushing Correll set'. Q's 'lips' could alternatively be modernized as 'lips' or 'lip's'.
- 3 If snow is used as the standard by which to judge whiteness, her breasts, in comparison with it, are a dull grey-brown: though Booth (454) argues that 'the thrust of the line is at least as much toward mocking inexact hyperbolic metaphor . . . as toward depreciating the lady's complexion', some readers may judge otherwise.
- 4 If . . . wires Hairs and wires must have been readily compared because of the lavish use of gold wires in 'tires' and hair ornaments, so it may be that (gold) wires might be implied: 'Whereas (poets' mistresses') hairs are normally compared with (gold) wires, mine possesses black ones.'
- 5 damasked ornamented with variegated colours; or, having the hue of the damask rose (OED damask v. 3; damasked 4, with this example) red and white The 'damask' rose was red, but the suggestion here is both that he has seen variegated roses, and that he has seen red roses and white roses.
- 7 some perfumes suggests, sarcastically, that not all aromas classified as perfumes are delightful; cf. Hotspur's disgust with a fop's perfumes, IHA 1.3.36.
- 8 reeks exhales or emits steam or smoke (OED 2a, b): the word does not seem to have had quite such unpleasant associations for the Elizabethans as it was later to acquire (see Swift example, OED 3a), but was frequently linked with sweat, blood and bad breath; cf. Cor 3.3.120–1: 'You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate / As reek o'th'rotten fens'; and Cym 1.2.2.
- 11 a goddess go goddesses were supposedly recognized by their gait; go = walk.
- 13 rare choice, special
- 14 any . . . compare any woman misrepresented through deceptive similes: for she as 'woman' cf. AYL 3.2.10, in which Orlando prepares to write bad verses celebrating 'The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she'.

- 131 Celebrates the speaker's mistress, who exercises as much power over him as more conventional beauties do over their lovers. Although some allege that, because of her appearance, she must lack this power, he claims that she does have it; but he acknowledges that she is black in behaviour.
- 1 tyrannous a stock epithet applied to 'Petrarchan' mistresses: cf. Spenser, Amoretti (1595), 10.5, where the mistress is called 'the Tyrannesse'; or Sidney, AS, 2.11, 'I call it praise to suffer Tyrannie'.
so as thou art such as you are, so lacking in conventional beauty as you are: another highly charged so, as in 127.10 and 129.11
- 2 As . . . cruel as those who, being generally regarded as beautiful, have some cause to take pride in their looks and their power over their lovers
- 3 dear doting heart my own heart, which loves you devotedly; perhaps with some suggestion, if dear is read as an adverb, of 'paying a high price for this infatuation'
- 4 jewel For the image of a jewel for the most precious love-object, cf. Oth 3.3.159–60: 'Good name in man and woman's dear, my lord; / Is the immediate jewel of their souls', and many other instances.
- 5 in good faith either the speaker's expletive, or a phrase governing the speech of others: 'surprisingly enough, some say'; or, 'some say, and say sincerely'
- 6 make love groan cause lovers to complain: like 'tyranny', the 'groans' of unhappy lovers belong to Petrarchan tradition, as in Sidney's AS, 54, in which Astrophil lists the conventional signs of love, such as 'give each speech a full point of a groane'; cf. also RJ 1.1.197–8.
- 9–10 I . . . groans suggests that he uses groans to reinforce and validate the truth of what he swears by groaning while he swears; but because groans are ambivalent, being more frequently associated with 'pain or distress' (OED groan 1a) than with erotic delight, the hyperbole of A thousand groans activates a suspicion that the speaker's response to his lady is not wholly adoring, and may even hint at the possibility that he has been venereally infected by her.
- 11 One . . . neck refers either to the groans, which come thick and fast (OED neck 4; and Tilley, M1013, 'One misfortune comes on the neck of another'); or to the speaker and his mistress, who in embracing testify to his devotion. To 'fall on one's neck' is a biblical term for a loving embrace, as in Genesis, 33.4, 45.14; Acts, 20.37.
- 12 my judgement's place the place where my judgement resides, that is, my brain or consciousness. The conjunction in ll. 11–12 of neck, witness, black and 'the place of judgement' suggests an allusion to a condemned person being hanged, as in the proverb 'Wedding and hanging go by destiny', Tilley, W232; note also the possible sexual connotations of place, as in 6.3–4.
- 14 this slander the allegation, in ll. 5–6, that the woman's appearance makes her unlovable. One charge is disposed of, only to be replaced by a worse one. as I think Booth (457) calls this phrase 'a single graceful razor stroke', especially since the speaker implies 'that she hasn't the moral sensitivity to notice that she has been cut apart'.

131

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou knowst, to my dear dotting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet in good faith some say, that thee behold, 5
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan;
To say they err, I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone;
And to be sure that is not false, I swear
A thousand groans but thinking on thy face; 10
One on another's neck do witness bear
Thy black is fairest in my judgement's place.
In nothing art thou black save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

- 132 Further elaborating the conceit of the mistress as both black and cruel, the speaker claims that her eyes mourn for her scorned lover.
- 1 as as if
- 2 torment probably infinitive, = (to) torment, forming an indirect statement after Knowing
- 3 loving mourners as in 127.10: further evidence that the reduplicated eyes . . . eyes in 127.9–10 is not an error, but an emphatic affirmation of the conceit of black eyes as mourners *suit*ed in black apparel
- 4 pretty ruth charming compassion
- 5 morning an obvious pun on 'mourning', made explicit in 9, which serves to suggest that this sun, like the eyes, is dark
- 6 grey cheeks the grey (perhaps cloudy) twilight of early dawn, seen as cheeks on either side of the face of the weakly shining sun: there seems little doubt that the praise here is ironical, for in no scale of beauty can human cheeks be praised for being grey. Like Miso and her daughter Mopsa in Sidney's Arcadia, the lady 'observe[s] decorum', having features which match each other in dinginess (OA, 30–1). Though Booth (457), perhaps trying to soften the sonnet's misogynistic taunts, claims that 'the sun gives colour to the gray clouds as it gives colour to the cheeks of a pallid person', both ll. 5–6 and 7–8 seem to suggest dim light (eyes) which matches surrounding greyness rather than contrasting with it.
- 7 that full star the planet, generally Venus, though sometimes Mercury (cf. Sidney, OA, 71.7), which is the first visible star in the darkening sky: though full, this star sheds no light.
- 8 sober subdued in tone, neutral-tinted (OED 9a)
- 10–12 Building on his claim that the mistress's black eyes both betoken pity and look beautiful, the speaker pleads for her to extend her pity – equated with blackness – to all the rest of her body.
- 10 beseem more or less synonymous with 'become', = be fitting, be apt for: unusually, and perhaps to underline the unconventionality of what is being said, Shakespeare makes a new start after nine lines rather than the normal eight.
- 12 suit dress, adorn like alike, identically
- 13 Then if you pity me; by implication, acquiesce sexually
- 13–14 a somewhat swaggering assertion, especially since he has already made such a claim in 127: 'Respond to my advances, and I will use my poetic power to champion your blackness as the summation of beauty.' Cf. with the same black/lack rhyme, Berowne's ironic praise of 'black beauty', LLL 4.3.248–50.

- 133 The speaker rebukes the mistress for enslaving his next self, his friend, as well as himself, and tries to negotiate better terms by enclosing the friend's heart in his own bosom.
- 1 Beshrew evil befall, devil take: cf. OED 3b; Oth 4.3.78.
makes . . . groan supposedly with adoration, as in 131.6, 10
- 2 that . . . gives primarily an application of the conventional conceit of male lovers' hearts wounded by darts from a lady's eyes, as in Sidney, AS, 2.2, 20.1, 48.12; but Booth (460) suggests an innuendo on the woman offering her sexual parts, sometimes described as a wound, as in PP 9.12–14, to both men.
- 4 But but that, without the consequence that slave to slavery tautology for 'enslaved to a tyrant', but also suggesting 'compelled to slavish drudgery (possibly sexual)'. The notion of a Petrarchan lover as a slave was conventional; cf. Sidney, AS, 29.14, 35.10, 53.5, 86.9.
- 5 from myself from my own nature
- 6 my next self the self nearest to me, i.e. my friend; cf. 36, 39.
harder more severely, more cruelly
- engrossed gathered up, gained a monopoly in (OED 4), with a further suggestion of 'gross' or greedy acquisitiveness
- 9 Prison imprison thy . . . ward the harshly unyielding prison cell of your bosom: for the notion of a 'bosom' as a tightly locked cell, cf. MM 5.1.11, 'To lock it in the wards of covert bosom'; for ward, cf. 48.4.
- 8 crossed thwarted, opposed
- 10 bail OED 1, 'To confine, rare', with this example: the reader may at first imagine that the speaker is offering his own heart as a pledge to the mistress on condition that she lets the friend out on 'bail', but the following lines indicate that OED's gloss is correct.
- 11–12 Though the mistress may keep the speaker closely imprisoned, as in l. 9, so long as his heart in turn is permitted to be the guard, or jailer (or prisoner), of the friend's heart, she cannot torment him – use rigour – presumably because he will be so happy in the possession of his friend's heart.
- 13 pent imprisoned, enclosed
- 14 all . . . me i.e. the friend, enclosed in the speaker's bosom

133

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me;
Is't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken, 5
And my next self thou harder hast engrossed:
Of him, myself and thee I am forsaken,
A torment thrice threefold thus to be crossed.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward;
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail. 10
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my jail.
And yet thou wilt, for I being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

3 enough] ynough 6 engrossed] ingrossed 8 threefold] three-fold 10 bail] bale 12 jail] laile

- 134 This sonnet continues from the preceding, with a further plea, couched in legal metaphors, for the mistress to release the friend from her keeping into his.
- 1 now now that
 2 And and that mortgaged pledged, legally bound will desire, carnal appetite (cf. MM 2.4.164); sexual organ, as in the following sonnet. Booth (463–4) observes also that ‘If the speaker’s friend is not a literary fabrication, and if his first name was William, then an informed reader would have heard “your William”, “the William who is thine”.’
- 3 so on condition that that other mine that other ‘self’ I possess; cf. PT 36, ‘Either was the other’s mine’; in both cases with a secondary suggestion of a mine of precious metal
- 5 But however (despite the entreaty I have just made)
- 7 He discovered how to sign his name on my behalf only as a guarantor or proxy-wooer (but surety-like): the implication is that the friend became a slave to the woman (as in 133.4) only because he was kind, and was trying to help or liberate the speaker. It is tempting to take write for me as suggesting not merely a signature at the end of a legal agreement, but the composition of compromising letters or love poems on the speaker’s behalf.
- 8 Under under the terms of; at the end of, at the bottom of (the document) fast tightly, rigorously
- 9 ‘You will demand everything to which your beauty entitles you’ (Booth, 465)
- 10 elaborating the notion of the woman as covetous: suggests that in her sexual voracity she is both miserly, like a usurer or money-lender, and over-lavish, in ‘putting forth’, or exposing for sale or exhibiting (OED put 43b), all that she has for (sexual) use. Cf. 20.14; and contrast sonnet 4, in which the fair youth is a Profitless usurer, who has ‘traffic with thyself alone’.
- 11 sue pursue (as if legally, for payment of a debt); sue to, woo came (who) came
- 12 my unkind abuse either, ‘the unkind mistreatment I have received (from the woman)’; or, ‘my own injury to my friend (whom I have allowed to become embroiled on my behalf)’; or both
- 14 He . . . whole He pays the entire ‘debt’ to the covetous woman – that is, satisfies her sexually, as in the notion of the conjugal debt, the obligation to sustain sexual relations in marriage: cf. Chaucer, Wife of Bath’s Prologue, 130, 153–5; St Paul, 1 Corinthians, 7.4.
free of debt, i.e. of sexual obligation or tie (RP)

134

So now I have confessed that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgaged to thy will,
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore to be my comfort still;
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free, 5
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learned but surety-like to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use, 10
And sue a friend, came debtor for my sake:
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
 Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me;
 He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

1 confessed] confest 2 mortgaged] morgag'd 7 learned] leard

- 135 This and the following elaborate the idea of the woman's sexual voracity by means of what Booth (466) calls 'festivals of verbal ingenuity', playing on will as a word for sexual desire, a male Christian name, and a word for sexual organs, male or female. Here the word occurs thirteen times (and milt once), seven instances being italicized and capitalized in Q. Since there is probably a designed distinction between the two forms, capitalization has been retained.
- 1 suggests that while other women may enjoy or nourish mere 'wishes', the woman addressed possesses the more sexually defined and/or humanly individuated Will: 'While other women may have (mere) wishes, your sexual desires are fulfilled/you possess your William'. As in the preceding (see 134.14n.) there may be an allusion to Chaucer's Wife of Bath, whose Tale illustrates woman's desire for 'sovereynetee', along with the connected adage that 'Women will have their wills', Tilley, W723; cf. also Tilley, W715, 'Women must have their wills while they live because they make none when they die.'
- 2 to boot into the bargain, in addition (OED boot sb. 1). Q's spelling 'too' may perhaps reinforce the sense of excess.
- in overplus in addition, in excess
- 3 More than enough Playing with the concepts of one and many, the speaker seems to brag that he can serve the lady better than all her other lovers put together.
- am I probably quibbling on 'Will-I-am', as in 121.9
- vex harass, torment, in this case with repeated sexual approaches
- 4 by vexing you (as above) adding another will (sexual organ/man called William) to your own sweet one
- 5 whose . . . spacious suggests, offensively, both that the addressee is generous in her desires, and that her vagina has been enlarged by promiscuity
- 6 once just this once; once and for all
- 7 gracious graceful, attractive
- 8 in . . . shine In, or with reference to, my desire will no prospect of favourable reception be manifest?
- 9 'The sea refuses no river (is never full)', Tilley, S181; and cf. Orsino's comments on his love, whose capacity 'Receiveth as the sea', TN 1.1.11, and in 2.4.101 is 'as hungry as the sea'.
- 11 being . . . thy Will being already rich in desire (your own and/or that of your lovers), and in a man or men called William, nevertheless (I bid you) add to the Will you already have: according to Booth (468), 'the slipperiness of the rhetorically calculated ellipsis results in a parody of the deviousness of an unscrupulous, unskillful, and unsuccessful would-be seducer'.
- 12 one desire (sexual organ) of mine, to enlarge your sexual capaciousness (cf. l. 5 and n.) yet further; there may be a further innuendo on tumescence: 'to make the (male) sexual organ, already enlarged by attraction to you, even bigger'.
- 13 possibly, 'Let no act of (uncharacteristic) unkindness (unkind as noun) frustrate any reasonable sexual entreaties'; or, if punctuated with a comma after 'no', (Let no, unkind . . .) = 'Stop saying "no", unkind mistress, and killing fair beseechers'.
- 14 Regard all your beseechers – lovers – as a single one, and treat me as your only object of desire/man called William/occupant of your sexual space.

135

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,
 And Will to boot, and Will in overplus;
 More than enough am I, that vex thee still,
 To thy sweet will making addition thus.
 Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious, 5
 Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
 Shall will in others seem right gracious,
 And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
 The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
 And in abundance addeth to his store; 10
 So thou, being rich in Will, add to thy Will
 One will of mine, to make thy large Will more:
 Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
 Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

1, 2, 11, 12, 14 Will] Will 2 to] too overplus] ouer-plus

- 136 This sonnet continues to elaborate puns on will/Will in support of the speaker's claim for sexual acceptance.
- 1 soul conscience; intuition check reprove, rebuke
so near suggests sexual intimacy, as in all too near, 61.14
- 2 thy blind soul inherently blind, 'because it is shut up within the body and so cannot verify what is reported to it' (Booth, 470, summarizing T.G. Tucker); or blinded by passion
I . . . Will I was what you desired; your man called William
- 3 admitted allowed to enter; acknowledged as an entity there refers both to the woman's soul and her genitals (RP)
- 4 sweet may apply to love-suit; or function as an address to the sweet woman; or, adverbially, suggest the sweetly pleasurable fulfilment of the love-suit
- 5 Will will fulfil 'William/sexual desire will gratify': the threefold -ill sound creates a comic or satiric effect, as well as hinting at the 'ill' or evil nature of what is proposed.
treasure associated with female sexual reward, as in 2.6, Oth 4.3.88; and with female pudenda, Ham 1.3.31, MM 2.4.97, Cym 2.2.42
- 6 Ay . . . wills opens up the word fulfil to bring out its literal application: Indeed, fill (your sexual organ) full to the brim with male sexual organs. Q's 'I' suggests also 'I, alone, can do this', resuming the sexual brag of 'More than enough am I' in l. 3 of the preceding sonnet. For puns on 'I/Ay', cf. R7 3.2.45–50; R2 4.1.201.
my will one my sexual organ one among the crowd; my sexual organ unique, alone able to fill your treasury or satisfy your desire for treasure
- 7 In . . . receipt with reference to things (sexual organs; cf. IH4 3.3.20–4; TGV 3.1.342–6) of large capacity, able to 'receive' or contain a great deal with . . . prove we easily demonstrate (that)
- 8 Cf. Marlowe, Hero and Leander, 1.255–6: 'One is no number; maids are nothing then / Without the sweet society of men' (Poems, 17), a truism derived from Aristotle's Metaphysics, 1080a, becoming proverbial by this period; cf. Tilley, O54. Reckoned suggests both 'apprehended' and 'calculated'.
- 9 in . . . untold let me be included (embraced) in the number (of your lovers) uncounted, or unspoken of; cf. tell as 'count or calculate', as in 12.1.
- 10 thy store's account the list of goods you possess; the list of your ample (sexual) possessions: for store as 'ample possessions or provision', cf. 14.12, 64.8.
- 11 hold . . . hold plays on hold as 'embrace', as in 'to have and to hold' in the Prayer Book marriage vows (BCP, 292); and as 'esteem, evaluate', as in Ham 2.2.44–5: 'I hold my duty as I hold my soul / Both to my God and to my gracious King'.
- 12 That nothing, me, that nothing, thing of no worth, which is me a . . . thee an object which is pleasurable, or lovable, or of value, in your estimation: echoes and redefines the ambivalent sweet of l. 4
- 13 Make but only make; make only
- 14 appears to clinch the case for the lady's assent by equating her self-evident love for will – her desire, sexual or otherwise – with the speaker's name: 'Your desire is your will, so Will must be what you love.' No doubt there is a suggestion both that 'my name is William' and 'my name is desire (will) – I am synonymous with what you want'; cf. Ham 1.2.146, 'Frailty, thy name is woman'.

136

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
 Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
 And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
 Thus far for love my love-suit sweet fulfil.
 Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love, 5
 Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one;
 In things of great receipt with ease we prove
 Among a number one is reckoned none.
 Then in the number let me pass untold,
 Though in thy store's account I one must be. 10
 For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
 That nothing, me, a something sweet to thee.
 Make but my name thy love, and love that still;
 And then thou lov'st me, for my name is Will.

2, 5, 14 Will] Will 6 Ay,] I 8 reckoned] reckon'd 12 something] some-thing 14 lov'st] louest

- 137 After eleven sonnets celebrating the erotic power of the 'dark lady', the speaker draws attention to his distorted vision: his eyes have construed the 'dark lady' as fair, leading his heart to believe, wrongly, that she is also virtuous; yet he continues to be governed by blind love.
- 1 blind fool love Cupid, traditionally represented as blind; cf. Tilley, L506, 'Love is blind.' Sidney called love a 'fool' in AS, 11.14.
- 2 see . . . see do not correctly interpret what they see; cf. the account of the heathen in Psalms, 115.5, 'eyes have they, but they see not'.
- 3 where it lies where (true) beauty resides; perhaps with a subsidiary sense of 'in what respect it is deceptive, lying'
- 4 take suppose, esteem (OED 47)
- 5 corrupt . . . looks whose judgement is distorted by looking with too much 'partiality', particular favour
- 6 the . . . ride the harbour (female body) where all men find sexual release: ships were normally described as 'riding' at anchor (OED ride 7a). For the sexual application of a ship coming in to harbour, cf. Oth 2.1.76–80: 'Great Jove, Othello guard, / And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath, / That he may bless this bay with his tall ship, / And swiftly come to Desdemona's arms'. Note also the more explicitly sexual elaboration of the metaphor in Thomas Carew's A Rapture, 85ff.: 'Yet my tall Pine, shall in the Cyprian straight / Ride safe at Anchor, and unlade her freight'.
- 7 Still addressing love, the speaker asks 'Why have you fashioned (or falsely created) hooks out of the false judgement, or unreliability, of (my) eyes?' forged forged
- 8 judgement . . . heart inner judgement, love: the octave's sustained conceit depends on a strained distinction between eyes and heart, suggesting that, but for Cupid's mischievous manipulation, the speaker's eyes might have been deceived, leaving his heart nevertheless untouched.
- 9 think consider, believe a several plot a private, separate area, such as a walled or fenced garden-plot: see OED several 7a, 'of land, esp. of enclosed pasture'.
- 10 the . . . place the region where all people (at least, all male persons) go: a dry-land equivalent of 'the bay where all men ride' in l. 6
- 11 Or mine eyes or (why do) my eyes?
this . . . this this fact, that the woman whose beauty I have praised is promiscuous
- 12 with the consequence that my eyes have projected sexual virtue, as well as beauty (fair truth), on to such an unattractive exterior: like many characters in Shakespeare's plays, the speaker has extrapolated from a fair appearance (though in this case, paradoxically, foul, but love is blind) a virtuous nature: cf. for instance Cym 5.5.62–6: 'Mine eyes / Were not in fault, for she was beautiful: / Mine ears that heard her flattery, nor my heart / That thought her like her seeming'.
- 13 In with regard to; cf. 136.7.
- 14 this false plague this 'affliction of distorted perceptions' (Booth, 476); this false woman, who is a plague to me. There is no doubt an additional suggestion that, because of her promiscuity, the woman is infected and infectious; cf. Lear's description of Goneril, KL 2.4.225–7, as 'a boil, / A plague-sore, or embossed carbuncle / In my corrupted blood'.
transferred may be taken to suggest that the speaker formerly loved a true woman: the legal sense of 'transfer' as 'convey, make over' (OED 2) is partly applicable.

137

Thou blind fool love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks, 5
Be anchored in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Whereto the judgement of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot
Which my heart knows the wide world's common 10 place?
Or mine eyes, seeing this, say this is not,
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have erred,
And to this false plague are they now transferred.

- 138 This sonnet analyses the system of mutually dependent self-deception by which the speaker pretends his mistress is chaste and she pretends he is young. This and 144 were included in The Passionate Pilgrim (1599); see Introduction, pp. 1–3.
- 1 made of truth composed of fidelity, perhaps with a pun on ‘maid’ = virgin
- 2 lies is lying; ‘lies with’ other men
- 3 That so that some untutored youth some young man inexperienced in love; cf. ‘untutor’d churl’, 2H6 3.2.213; ‘Untutor’d lad’, 3H6 5.5.32.
- 4 Unlearned unlearnèd: almost synonymous with untutored in the preceding line, yet elaborates the point: the speaker has neither been taught about the ways of the world, nor gained independent experience of them.
the . . . subtleties the crafty and deceptive stratagems of the majority of humankind; cf. OED subtlety 3, 4; and VA 675, ‘the fox which lives by subtlety’.
- 5 vainly wrongly, falsely; prompted by my own vanity, self-conceit
- 7, 8 Simply, simple truth Paradoxically, by pretending to be a ‘simpleton’ in behaving as if he believes the woman’s flattering words, the speaker colludes with her in refusing to acknowledge the truth which is simple in the sense of self-evident, manifest.
- 9 unjust incorrect; inaccurate (cf. OED 3, 4, with an example from John Davies of Hereford’s Mirum in Modum (1602), 1.2212): suggests a reference to the woman’s untruthfulness in claiming to be made of truth, as in l. 1, i.e. faithful, constant; and in her consequent flattering of her lover as young
- 11 best habit the best adornment (garments); the best habitual demeanour or practice seeming trust in appearing to trust, or to be trustworthy, or both
- 12 age in love an old person when in love: for age as ‘an aged person’, cf. WT 4.4.750; also PP 12, ‘Crabbed age and youth’.
told recounted; enumerated
- 13 lie with collude in untruths with; have sex with: cf. Othello’s confused railings, Oth 4.1.35–6: ‘Lie with her? lie on her? We say lie on her when they belie her. Lie with her, zounds, that’s fulsome!’

138

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
 I do believe her, though I know she lies,
 That she might think me some untutored youth
 Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
 Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young, 5
 Although she knows my days are past the best,
 Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue;
 On both sides thus is simple truth suppressed.
 But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
 And wherefore say not I that I am old? 10
 O love's best habit is in seeming trust,
 And age in love loves not t' have years told:
 Therefore I lie with her, and she with me,
 And in our faults by lies we flattered be.

3 untutored] vntuterd 4 Unlearned] Vnskilfull PP subtleties] subtilties Q; forgeries PP, Benson
 6 she knows my days] I know my yeares PP 7 Simply I credite] I smiling, credite PP false-speaking] false speaking 8] Outfacing faults in Loue, with loues ill rest. PP, Benson suppressed] suppress 9 says . . . unjust] sayes my Loue that she is young PP 11 in seeming trust] a soothing toung PP, Benson 13] Therefore I'll lye with Loue, and Loue with me, PP, Benson 14] Since that our faults in Loue thus smother'd be. PP, Benson

- 139 The speaker elaborates the theme of the woman's lack of truth in an appeal to her to be less open in her wandering glances, however unfaithful she may be in actuality.
- 1 presumably alludes to the ingenious paradoxes of the two preceding sonnets, in which the speaker has expounded and to some extent 'justified' his devotion to a promiscuous woman
- 3 'Do not injure me by turning your eye elsewhere, but by speaking to me (of your other lovers).'
- 4 probably, 'deploy your power powerfully and/or overtly, and do not destroy me by means of oblique or subtle stratagems'.
- 5 Tell . . . elsewhere primarily, 'tell me that you love someone else'; but with a suggestion also of 'choose another, less public, place for telling me of your deviant affection'.
- 6 Dear heart a form of affectionate address to the woman, rather than an allusion to the speaker's own organ of emotion: cf. the application of the phrase to the fair youth in 95.13.
glance . . . aside make sidelong glances away from me – by implication, towards other lovers: for the metaphorical application of 'glance aside', cf. 76.3.
- 7 cunning . . . might Cunning and might correspond with the distinction between art and power in l. 4. The tone is probably sarcastic, for it seems that the woman is being quite overt in making eyes at other men while she is with the speaker; but he supposedly implores her to be less subtle.
- 8 my o'er-pressed defence presumably, 'my already worn-down resistance (to the onslaught of your attractive looks)' bide endure; withstand: cf. RJ 1.1.211, 'Nor bide th'encounter of assailing eyes'.
- 9 Let . . . thee Making a true volta in the sestet, the speaker attempts, after all, to justify, or excuse, the woman's wandering looks.
my love the woman
- 10–12 elaborates the Petrarchan conceit of the woman's eyes as 'killing' the lover: since they have thus injured the speaker, she supposedly spares him by turning their injurious force on others.
- 14 By turning her looks on him, rather than others, the woman can free him of pain by killing him outright: this suggests that the lady is like the basilisk, which could kill with its gaze (cf. 3H6 3.2.187, Cym 2.4.107 and other examples), and may be read either as a plea for devoted affection, or as a satirical death-wish. Monarchs, too, were thought of as having killing looks, as in R2 3.2.165. Like the references to groans in 131 and 133, the speaker's elaboration of looks can be construed as savagely mocking rather than complimentary.

139

O call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere; but in my sight, 5
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside.
What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy might
Is more than my o'er-pressed defence can bide?
Let me excuse thee: ah, my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies, 10
And therefore from my face she turns my foes
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries.
 Yet do not so, but since I am near slain,
 Kill me outright with looks, and rid my pain.

4 art] Art 5, 12 elsewhere] else-where 8 o'er-pressed] ore-prest 14 outright] out-right

- 140 Building on the preceding sonnet, the speaker implores the woman at least to behave and speak as if she loves him, for fear of driving him mad and so provoking him to speak ill of her.
- 1 press subject to pressure, probably with reference to executing 'the punishment of peine forte et dure upon a person arraigned for felony who stood mute', OED press 1a, b. Shakespeare elsewhere associates unpleasant sexual dealings with a woman with 'pressing to death', as in MM 5.1.520; in TC 3.2.217–18 the image immediately precedes an allusion to 'tongue-tied maidens'.
- 2 tongue-tied Like Sidney's Astrophil, Shakespeare deploys the conceit of his own silence as a lover, despite the fact that the lover's voice alone is heard in his sonnets: cf. AS, 54.13.
- 4 pity-wanting pain 'pain caused by your lack of pity, and/or by my desire for you to pity me'
- 5 wit ingenuity, craftiness, perhaps with reference to the sexual knowingness that supposedly enables a woman to get or keep a man: cf. the Nurse's husband's remark to the toddler Juliet, 'Thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit', RJ 1.3.41.
- 5–6 'It would be better, though you are unable or unwilling to love me, at least to take pleasure (to love) in telling me that you do.'
- 7 testy short-tempered, peevish (OED 2a)
- 8 'Doctors give (peevish) dying men none but favourable bulletins, in order to avoid exciting their wrath.'
- 10 Though the speaker warns the woman that her cruel behaviour may provoke him to speak ill of her in the future, it could be argued, if the sonnets are read sequentially, that he has already spoken ill of her in the preceding sonnets, in which she is depicted as ugly and promiscuous. Seven sonnets further on, in 147, the speaker's prediction that he may grow mad, and consequently speak in a mad, disordered way, is explicitly fulfilled.
- 11 Now now that; now (it is the case) that this ill-wresting world this world (of rumour and false speech) which is so apt to twist ('wrest') the truth, or to make the good seem bad
- 12 mad ears synecdoche for hearers, all those madmen who either 'wrest' the words they hear, or, conversely, fail to recognize them as slanderous believed believed
- 13 belied lied about; Q's 'be lyde' permits a suggestion also of 'be lain with', i.e. be spoken of as sleeping around; cf. Oth 4.1.35–6 (see 138.13n.)
- 14 reverts to the more conventional allusion to a mistress's eyes, rather than eye: develops the Petrarchan and Sidneian conceit of her eyes shooting out beams of light like arrows from a (or Cupid's) bow: cf. Sidney, AS, 47.2, 66.11. She is implored to aim them at the speaker alone – straight – even though internally her proud heart carries her affections wide of the mark.

- 141 Denying that he loves the woman with any of his five senses, the speaker claims somewhat sardonically to love her only with his heart, the site both of sin and of the suffering which is the penalty for sin.
- 1 In faith perhaps sarcastic; cf. in good faith, 131.5.
eyes Cf. 137 on the corruption of both eyes and heart.
- 2 errors primarily, 'deviations from beauty, i.e. uglinesses'; but following allusions to the woman's promiscuity in the six preceding sonnets, there is doubtless some suggestion also of 'moral errors'.
note notice; enumerate: cf. 99.14, and Luc 208.
- 3 they my eyes
- 4 in . . . view in spite of what my eyes see: probably with a pun on 'in despite of you' is . . . dote chooses to love excessively or foolishly (cf. 'please' as impersonal passive verb, OED 4b)
- 6 Nor is my own delicate sense of touch eager for base touches, i.e. low-grade or unpleasing sexual encounters: cf. the Duke's references to the 'abominable and beastly touches' which are the pimp's livelihood, MM 3.2.23. For prone as 'eager', cf. Cym 5.4.205.
- 7 Nor taste nor (do) taste
- 7-8 desire . . . alone The metaphor of sexual congress as a sensual feast, though found in Ficino and elsewhere, may here allude specifically to George Chapman's Ovids Banquet of Seneca (1595), which explores Ovid's attraction to Corynna bathing through a celebration of each of the five senses, culminating in touch. The final phrase makes the sexual application clear: while a literal feast would require the presence of many guests, this is a private banquet with thee alone.
- 9 But my but (neither) my five wits . . . senses Shakespeare consistently distinguishes the five wits from the five senses: cf. RJ 1.4.47, 3.4.78; MA 1.1.66; KL 3.4.58, 3.6.57. For a detailed analysis of the five senses and wits, cf. Sir John Davies, Nosce Teipsum (1599), 960-1171. But as Booth (487) observes, 'their juxtaposition is carefully calculated to confuse in the very act of distinguishing'.
- 10 servng rendering obedience to you as your lover, possibly with a subsidiary sense of 'mate with' – the second application normally referring to the copulation of animals (OED serve 8d, 52)
- 11 unswayed unwielded; uncontrolled (OED; and cf. RJ 4.4.470). Booth (487) paraphrases: 'the speaker's body is left unswayed – he is left a shell of a man – because his heart has left . . . to live in his lady's bosom as a slave'.
- 12 slave . . . wretch Cf. 57.1, where the speaker was the young man's slave, and 58.4, where he was his vassal.
- 13-14 Samuel Butler aptly glossed, 'I shall suffer less for my sin hereafter, for I get some of the punishment coincidentally with the offence' (quoted in Booth, 488). The pain the woman gives him may be either emotional – caused by her unkindness, her open promiscuity – or physical: if she infects him with venereal disease she punishes him directly for his sexual sin.

141

In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleased to dote.
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted, 5
Nor tender feeling to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits, nor my five senses, can Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee, 10
Who leaves unswayed the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

4 pleased] pleasd 11 unswayed] vnswai'd

- 142 Continuing from the end of the preceding sonnet, the speaker elaborates a chiasmic conceit of his own sexual sin and the woman's sexual virtue, or scornful treatment of him.
- 1 The speaker sins in loving (wooing, or making love to) the woman, whereas she, in scorning him, appears to manifest virtue: dear virtue suggests 'the virtue you hold dear', but in context appears ironic.
 - 2 suggests primarily that the woman hates the speaker's sinful, because lustful, love of her; however, in the light of the next eight lines it seems that the woman's hate is also 'grounded on sinful loving', i.e., derived from her own uncontrolled sexual desire; the pot calls the kettle black.
 - 6 profaned . . . ornaments treats promiscuity as a form of sacrilege, in which the woman has dishonoured the holy redness of her lips by kissing too freely. Booth (491–2) suggests an allusion to 'scarlet vestments', and so, by association with cardinals, to the 'cardinal virtues'; but the following line invokes, rather, an association with red wax seals on legal documents, which might bear the impress of ecclesiastical or civic authority. Shakespeare nowhere else describes lips as scarlet (though Sidney does, identifying them with the scarlet robes of judges, AS, 73.11), and there may be an ironical inversion of the biblical associations of scarlet with sin in general and sinful women in particular: cf. Isaiah, 1.18; Revelation, 17.3; and cf. Spenser, FQ, 1.ii.13.2, 1.viii.29.2.
 - 7 sealed . . . love bestowed kisses which have offered false assurances of commitment: Shakespeare often identifies kisses with seals, as in VA 511, TGV 2.2.7, RJ 5.3.114, KJ 2.1.20; the closest analogy is offered by the song sung to Mariana, MM 4.1.5–6: 'But my kisses bring again, bring again; /Seals of love, but seal'd in vain, seal'd in vain'.
 - 8 others' . . . rents The distinction between rents and revenues (pronounced revènues) is not a sharp one: the general sense is that 'you and I have both (often) deprived our lawful partners of their sexual due, bestowing sexual favours elsewhere'. Cf. Emilia's protest at straying husbands who 'pour our treasures into foreign laps', thus provoking their wives to do likewise, Oth 4.3.88.
 - 9 Be it if it is lawful allowable that I . . .
 - 10 Whom . . . woo whom you pursue with amorous looks, as in 139 and 140
importune importune
 - 11 Root plant, establish
 - 13 what . . . hide pity, here equated with sexual compliance: the notion seems to recall the citation of those 'That do not do the thing they most do show', 94.2: while those individuals are praised for moving others but being themselves unmoved, this addressee is implored, conversely, to release in herself the susceptibility to (sexual) feeling that she provokes in others.
 - 14 self-example the example of yourself denied denied (sexual favours)

142

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving;
O but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or if it do, not from those lips of thine, 5
That have profaned their scarlet ornaments,
And sealed false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Robbed others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo, as mine importune thee, 10
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows,
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example mayst thou be denied.

6 profaned] prophan'd 7 sealed] seald 8 Robbed} Robd

- 143 An unusually extended simile is set up in the first eight lines: the woman is compared to one who, in running after a strayed fowl, abandons her babe-in-arms, which pursues her. The feathered creature is presumably to be identified with the object or objects of the woman's amorous glances in 139–40 and 142.9–10, and the speaker, as becomes apparent in the last three lines, identifies himself with the neglected child. The sonnet plays on the traditional image of amorous pursuit as a hunt, but in a scaled-down, unchivalric, domestic arena – not a royal game forest, but a humble backyard. It also recalls and reverses the central thrust of VA: instead of showing a woman in hot sexual pursuit of a young boy who prefers hunting animals, Shakespeare here shows a child in desperate pursuit of a woman who prefers hunting for a chicken to caring for her infant.
- 1 careful conscientious, painstaking; full of cares or anxieties housewife pronounced 'hussif': 'a woman who manages or directs the affairs of her household . . . a woman who manages her household with skill and thrift' (OED 1; and cf. AYL 1.2.33)
- 2 feathered creatures primarily denotes chickens or other domestic fowl, but there may also, as Booth (494–5) suggests, be a suggestion of 'the sort of dandified rivals – the "popinjays" – of which men in the speaker's situation are traditionally both jealous and scornful'. Also, since the woman gives priority to the feathered creature over her child, there may be a sidelong reference to the proverb 'Fair feathers make fair fowls', Tilley, F163.
broke away (which has) broken away (from the flock)
- 3 dispatch speed, haste (OED 6b)
- 4 pursuit stress on the first syllable
- 5 holds . . . chase chases after her, gives chase; with an ironical contrast between the child's 'holding chase' and the woman's failure to 'hold' the child
- 6 to catch her to capture her attention bent directed, intent upon
- 7 flies . . . face exploits the coincidence in meaning between 'fly' and 'flee', both to suggest biblical images such as those of the ungodly who 'flee before' the face of God (Psalms, 68.1), or of Jacob, who 'fleddest from the face of Esau' (Genesis, 35.1), and to suggest that 'even as she is watching it, the bird takes to its wings'
- 8 Not prizing thinking nothing of, caring nothing for: see OED prize v. 3b, with this example; and WT 4.4.386.
discontent unhappiness, resentment; cf. LC 56.
- 10 chase . . . behind pursue you from a distant position to the rear: recalls two earlier unsuccessful lovers, Chaucer's Pandarus, who remarks 'I hoppe alwey byhynde' (Troilus and Criseyde, 2.1107), and Wyatt's persona in the sonnet 'Whoso list to hunt', who claims 'I am of them that farthest cometh behind' (Wyatt, 77)
- 11 thy hope that which you hope for: cf. Sidney's OA, 12, in which Pyrocles/Cleophila sings sapphics to Philoclea 'speaking as it were to her own hope'
- 12 be kind behave with natural affection, no doubt with a play on sexual 'kindness'
- 13 thy Will equated with thy hope in l. 11, as well as with 'that which all women wish for', as in 135–6. If both pursuer and pursued are named William, there is a redoubled suggestion that the speaker will pray for her to possess both.
- 14 still silence, pacify with kisses

143

Lo, as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feathered creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe, and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase, 5
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent:
So run'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I, thy babe, chase thee afar behind. 10
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou mayst have thy Will,
If thou turn back and my loud crying still.

144 The speaker describes his Two loves, apparently the 'fair youth' and 'dark lady', and his fears that the latter has inveigled the former into her sexual space. He makes a sexual application of the medieval concept of the psychomachia, in which a good angel and an evil one compete for possession of a man's soul. The sonnet's number in the sequence, 12×12 , known as a 'gross', may be especially appropriate to this enumeration of the speaker's amorous possessions, which prove to be 'gross' also in the sexual sense: cf. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, 3.1.81, where Lorenzo Junior pours scorn on Stephen's supposed ability to utter sonnets 'by the grosse'.

With 138, this sonnet first appeared in The Passionate Pilgrim (1599) (see Introduction, pp. 1–6). The PP text of 144 varies less radically from Q than does that of 138, and in l. 6 offers a reading, side for Q's 'sight', which appears superior; see below.

- 1 Two loves two objects of love
- 2 spirits incorporeal beings, often 'conceived as troublesome, terrifying, or hostile to mankind' (OED spirit 3a): in Marlowe's Doctor Faustus, for instance, 'spirit' is used throughout to denote specifically an evil spirit or devil (Marlowe, Doctor Faustus, p. 10); cf. also Lady Macbeth's invocation of 'you Spirits / That tend on mortal thoughts', Mac 1.5.39–40. suggest insinuate (to evil), prompt (to good or evil action) (OED 1a, b); cf. MW 3.3.230, 'What spirit, what devil, suggests this imagination?' still continually
- 3, 4 The better angel . . . The worsor spirit separates off spirit, with its predominantly negative associations, from angel, with its predominantly positive ones: cf. Doctor Faustus (B text), where the first entry of the Good and Bad Angels runs 'Enter the Angel and Spirit'.
- 3 right fair As elsewhere, the fair youth may not be so much literally blond in complexion as fair because intensely loved and lovable, as in the expression 'white boy', 'A favourite, pet or darling boy' (OED 1): cf. A Yorkshire Tragedy (1608), Malone Society (1973), 510–11.

- 4 coloured ill of an unpleasing or ugly complexion; but like the 'fairness' of the man, the bad colouring of the woman may be as much emotional as literal, especially given the sense of coloured as 'specious' or 'falsely glossed over' (OED 3a, b).
- 6 side The better angel is identified with the 'guardian angel' assigned to each human being, whose normal position would be at the side of the person protected, as in depictions of Tobias and the Angel; or cf. Herbert's 'The Pilgrimage', 16–18: 'Here I was robb'd of all my gold, / Save one good Angell, which a friend had ti'd / Close to my side'. An even closer analogy is Oth 5.2.207–10, Gratiano on Desdemona's father's death: 'did he live now, / This sight would make him do a desperate turn, / Yea, curse his better angel from his side, / And fall to reprobation'. There seems little doubt that PP's side, rather than Q's 'sight', is correct.
- 8 foul pride pride and assurance which she manifests despite her foul appearance; reprehensible ostentation, magnificence (for the latter, see OED pride 6a)
- 9–11 fiend . . . friend evidently an acceptable rhyme in Elizabethan pronunciation; cf. VA 638, 640.
- 10 'I may be led to suspect, but cannot be sure by means of direct proof or sight': Shakespeare may be recalling the words scratched on a window of Woodstock Palace by the future Elizabeth I when she was a prisoner there: 'Much suspected by me / Nothing proved can be', as well as the proverb 'Suspicion is no proof' (Tilley, S1019); and cf. Oth 1.3.106.
- 11 being . . . friend both are out of my company and in that of each other, and/or friendly towards each other: for from as 'away from' cf. OED 5b, and Tim 4.3.533, H5 1.2.272, Ham

144

Two loves I have, of comfort and despair,
 Which, like two spirits, do suggest me still:
 The better angel is a man right fair,
 The worser spirit a woman coloured ill.
 To win me soon to hell my female evil 5
 Tempteth my better angel from my side,
 And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
 Wooing his purity with her foul pride;
 And whether that my angel be turned fiend
 Suspect I may, yet not directly tell; 10
 But being both from me both to each friend,
 I guess one angel in another's hell.
 Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
 Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

1.2.168 and passim; for to as 'near to', 'Expressing contiguity or close proximity', see OED 5b. But to each friend suggests also 'friendly towards each other'. Like Booth (498–9), 'I retain the Q punctuation because it includes the idea that the alliance of the two beloveds occurred only because they were introduced by the mutual friend they have betrayed.'

12 guess conjecture

one . . . hell following the clear distinction between better angel and wors-

er spirit in ll. 3–4, the primary suggestion is that the man right fair sexually possesses the woman coloured ill; for the equation of the female genitals with hell cf. 129.14 and n., and KL 4.6.127–30. Booth's suggestion (499–500) that 'each is a punishment to the other' may be an attempt to mitigate the misogyny of the image by distributing culpability equally. Though many commentators have linked the phrase with the game of barley-break, played by three couples,

2 Which] That PP suggest] sugiest 3, 4 The] My PP 4 coloured] colour'd Q; colour'd PP 6 side] PP Malone; sight Q 8 foul] fowle Q; faire PP 9 turned fiend] turn'd finde Q; turnde feend PP 11 from me] to me PP 13 Yet . . . know] The truth I shall not know PP

in which the middle ground, occupied by the middle couple, is called 'hell', the context no more specifically suggests an allusion to this than it does to the use of 'hell' to refer to the lower part of the stage in the theatre, or to part of the old lawcourts at Westminster, or to a debtors' prison (Chambers, Stage, 2.528; 3.30; OED hell 5, 6). J.Q.Adams suggested (Rollins, 1.370) that 144 influenced Epigram 15 in Samuel Rowlands's The Letting of Humours Blood [1600], the closest analogy being in the lines: 'How can he prove her for an Angell then? / That proves her selfe a Divell, tempting men, / And drawing many to the fierie pit, / Where they are burned for their ent'ring it.' But this, the present sonnet, and the KL passage may all draw on a shared traditional association of the female genitalia with a fiery 'hell'; cf., for instance, the obscene elaboration of the conceit in the satire 'News from Heaven and Hell' (see Peck, passim), in which Leicester's lust is punished by perpetual congress with a female fiend: 'Thus was his paradice turned into his purgatory, his fine furred gape into a flaming trape, his place of pleasure into a gulfe of vengeance, and his pricke of desier into a pillor of fier'.

13 ne'er know never know through observation, or as a fact (OED know 8, 10a)

14 until my good angel (the man right fair) is driven out by the evil one: see OED fire 8a, 'To drive (anyone) away from a place by fire', with examples from Marlowe's Edward II 3.2.127, and KL 5.3.22-3: 'He that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven, / And fire us hence like foxes'. In 144 there is presumably both an analogy with animals being smoked out of their holes or lairs and a suggestion that the man will sooner or later be venereally infected by the woman; cf. also the proverb 'One fire (heat) drives out another' (Tilley, F277).

- 145 This is a unique sonnet in octosyllabic lines: it describes a lover supposedly devastated by his mistress's declaration that she hates him, rescued only by the favourable completion of her utterance in the final line. Gurr has suggested that the sonnet is very early, belonging to the summer of 1582, when the 18-year-old Shakespeare was wooing Anne Hathaway: see l. 13n. Booth (500) calls it 'the slightest of sonnets', and Pooler (Ard¹) said 'Perhaps not Shakespeare's'.
- 1-5 make . . . Straight The fivefold iteration of similar sounds in make . . . hate . . . sake . . . state . . . Straight, in combination with short lines and a predominance of monosyllables, creates a childish, tripping movement which seems tonally to make light of the speaker's claim that the woman has the power of life and death over him; and note also used, anew, who, threw in ll. 7, 8, 12, 13.
- 1 love's own hand the hand of Cupid, or of Venus: cf. the fair youth's woman's face, painted with nature's own hand, 20.1.
- 2 This periphrastic way of indicating that the woman's lips uttered the phrase I hate suggests some play with the puffing aspirate at the beginning of hate.
- 3 languished . . . sake Cf. the octosyllabic charm in MND 2.2.26-8, when Oberon squeezes love-juice on Titania's eyes: 'What thou seest when thou dost wake / Do it for thy true love take, / Love and languish for his sake'.
- 7 Was used was (wont to be) used, was habitually used
- gentle doom merciful judgement
- 8 greet salute, offer words of address (OED 3a, b; and cf. Tit I. 1.1.90)
- 9-14 Malone aptly compares Luc 1534-40: "It cannot be," quoth she, "that so much guile," - / She would have said, - "can lurk in such a look." / But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while, / And from her tongue "can lurk" from "cannot" took: / "It cannot be" she in that sense forsook, / And turn'd it thus: "It cannot be, I find, / But such a face should bear a wicked mind."
- 10-11 as . . . night a tediously obvious analogy, as used in reverse form by Polonius to Laertes, Ham 1.3.79: 'it must follow as the night the day / Thou canst not then be false to any man'. The reminiscence of gentle doom (l. 7) also reinforces the idea that mercy is more natural to the woman than cruelty.
- who refers primarily to night, but also suggests the woman's rapidly diminishing hatred
- 13 'hate' away Gurr suggests a pun on 'Hathaway'.
- 14 And Booth (501) suggests a play on 'Anne'.

145

Those lips that love's own hand did make
 Breathed forth the sound that said 'I hate',
 To me, that languished for her sake;
 But when she saw my woeful state,
 Straight in her heart did mercy come, 5
 Chiding that tongue that, ever sweet,
 Was used in giving gentle doom,
 And taught it thus anew to greet:
 'I hate' she altered with an end
 That followed it as gentle day 10
 Doth follow night, who like a fiend
 From heaven to hell is flown away.
 'I hate' from 'hate' away she threw,
 And saved my life, saying 'not you'.

1 love's] Loues 2 Breathed] Breath'd 3 languished] languisht 7 used] vsde doom] dome
 9 altered] alterd 10 followed] follow'd 14 saved] sau'd

- 146 Addressing his soul, the speaker questions the rich and expensive adornments it bestows on the earth, or body, in which it is housed, exhorting it to prepare for death by consuming spiritual riches and repudiating earthly ones. The sonnet has been very extensively discussed, both because of its status as Shakespeare's only explicitly religious poem, and because of the unusually problematic textual crux in l. 2: for some of the proposed emendations, see textual notes. As far as the religious connotations go, the sonnet is perhaps not quite so extraordinary as has been claimed, but can be linked with other sonnets on the speaker's ageing and impending death, such as 63, 71, 73–4 and 81; however, the absence of any explicit allusion to a love-object is unusual. The problem of ageing is here approached in an individualistic way, posing the question of why an ageing body should be expensively dressed or generously fed.
- 1 centre . . . earth The body, as a microcosm of the world, has the soul as its centre.
 - 2 Feeding . . . array The suggestion is that the soul, of its essence a spiritual entity, has been captured by greedy, fleshly forces, which array, or deck splendidly, its external surroundings (OED array 8a; there is probably a play also on OED 1, to draw up prepared for battle) and require, like hungry troops, to be 'fed'. Maxwell points out that Daniel used the phrase 'rebel powers' in Cleopatra (1594), where it is applied to her own 'False flesh and blood' which threatens not to co-operate with her mental determination to kill herself. The similarity of application leaves little doubt that this passage was Shakespeare's source. The emendation Feeding, which completes a four-fold pattern of aural and semantic play on 'feed', with fading in l. 6, be fed in 12 and feed . . . feeds in l. 13, has been adopted on the advice of Helen Vendler. Presumably either eye-slip or careless dictation led to the Q com-
 - positor's repetition of My sinful earth.
 - 3 pine starve, lack food; waste away or languish (OED 5a, b, c)
 - 5 cost expense, expenditure; cf. 64.2 so . . . lease such a brief period of legitimate residence: cf. 'leases of short-numbered hours', 124.10.
 - 6 fading mansion the ageing body, seen as a decaying house within which the soul's residence will be brief
 - 8 charge expense, outlay (OED 10a)
Is . . . end Cf. 'Is this the promis'd end?', KL 5.3.263: suggests both 'Is this all that your richly adorned body has come to?' and 'Is this the purpose for which your body was destined, or at which it aimed?' (cf. OED end 13a, 14a).
 - 9 thy servant's loss the (impending) loss of the body, which should properly be subordinate to the soul
 - 10 let . . . store allow the body to languish or waste away (cf. l. 3) in order to increase your own abundance of possessions: for aggravate as 'increase, strengthen', see OED 5.
 - 11 terms divine suggests both legal conditions or terms which are heavenly, hence durable, in contrast to the 'short lease' of l. 5; and 'heavenly periods of time' – times without limit, eternity hours of dross combines a notion of wasted time and worthless material possessions
 - 12 Within inwardly without externally
 - 13 feed . . . men Cf. Psalms, 49, commenting on 'those that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches', in particular verse 14: 'like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling'.
 - 14 The notion, though not the specific wording, recalls several passages in the Bible, such as Isaiah, 25.8, 'He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from all faces'; or two sentences included in

- 147 Identifying his passion for the woman as a disease, the speaker shows himself abandoned by reason and in the grip of love-madness, which has deranged his judgement. Gregor Sarrazin (Rollins, 1.379) aptly linked it with Sidney's OA, 41, an 'octave' in which the duchess Gynecia laments her unfulfilled and unfulfillable desires: 'Like those sick folks, in whome strange humors flowe, / Can taste no sweetes, the sower onely please: / So to my minde, while passions daylie growe, / Whose fyrie chaines, uppon his freedome seaze, / Joie's strangers seeme, I cannot bide their showe, / Nor brooke ought els but well acquainted woe. / Bitter griefe tastes me best, paine is my ease, / Sicke to the death, still loving my disease.'
- 1-2 longing . . . longer Placed in such close proximity, these words suggest that longing still / For contains also a sense of 'desiring to prolong'.
- 2 nurseth the disease cherishes and sustains the illness, rather than the individual who suffers from it
- 3 Feeding If the emendation Feeding is accepted in 146.2, the word links these two sonnets, which both present the speaker's helpless subjection to desire in terms of gluttony.
the ill the disease, sickness (OED ill sb. 6)
- 4 uncertain sickly appetite the waver-ing appetite (desire) of a sick man
- 5 My reason Perhaps it was 'reason's' voice that we heard in the preceding sonnet, imploring the pining soul to feed itself and not the body, or bodily appetites.
- 6 prescriptions 'doctor's orders', 'any course of hygiene ordered by a physician' (OED 2); limitations or restrictions (OED 3)
- 7 desperate in despair; desperately sick approve discover by experience (OED 9)
- 8 'that (sexual) desire to which medical advice took exception, or objected, is fatal or death-bringing': cf. OED except 4; and R2 1.1.72.
- 9 reverses the proverb 'Past cure, past care' (Tilley, C921): it is his lack of care – heedfulness to reason – that places him beyond hope of recovery – cure. Cf. LLL 5.2.28.
- 10 frantic mad frantically mad: see OED frantic 4, with this as the first example
- 11 discourse speech
- 12 At random haphazardly, aimlessly: see OED random 3a; cf. also IH6 5.3.84, 'He talks at random (F: rondon): sure the man is mad'. Q's spelling, 'randon', is correct in the period, deriving from Old Fr. randon, force, rapid movement.
- 13 I . . . fair as in sonnets 127 and 130
- 14 as black as hell proverbial: cf. Tilley, H397, and LLL 4.3.254.

147

My love is as a fever, longing still
 For that which longer nurseth the disease,
 Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
 Th'uncertain sickly appetite to please:
 My reason, the physician to my love, 5
 Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
 Hath left me, and I, desperate, now approve Desire is death, which physic did except.
 Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
 And frantic mad with ever more unrest; 10
 My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
 At random from the truth vainly expressed:
 For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
 Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

5 physician] Phisition 8 physic] Phisick 9 reason] Reason 10 ever more] euer-more
 12 random] Malone; rando*n* Q expressed] exprest

- 148 This sonnet continues from the end of the preceding, elaborating the theme of the speaker's love-madness and distorted judgement.
- 1 love Whereas in line 147.1 love seemed to denote the emotion felt by the speaker, it seems here to be displaced into an external force, implicitly equated with Cupid.
- 4 censures . . . aright explores the possibility that the error is not in his eyes, but in his capacity to judge or appraise correctly what his eyes see, censures here having no sense of 'judge adversely': cf. OED censure 1, and JC 3.2.16, 'Censure me in your wisdom'.
- 5 both affirms and denies the validity of his appraisal of the love-object, by first raising the possibility that this object is indeed – according to external criteria – fair, yet describing the eyes that view her adoringly as false. For dote cf. 141.4 and n.
- 6 the world people in general, general opinion (OED 15); and cf. 107.2
- 7–8 love . . . men's 'The love (I have) indicates clearly that the vision of those in love is not as accurate as that of everyone else': a circuitous way of arriving at the truism that 'Love is blind' (Tilley, L506). For denote as 'indicate (outwardly)', cf. OED 3 and RJ 3.3.110.
- 8–9 Love's eye . . . love's eye seems to conflate Cupid's eyes – which are, of course, blind – with the wearied eyes of the speaker, perhaps with a play on 'love's I'
- 10 vexed afflicted, troubled with pain or distress (OED vex 2, 3a). watching staying awake at night, keeping watch; cf. 61.13 and n.
- 11 No marvel It is not surprising, or cause for amazement: cf. VA 390, 'Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone'.
- 12 The sun, as in 18.5, is treated as 'the eye of heaven', which here cannot see (the earth) until the intervening heaven is free of clouds.
- 13 cunning skilful, ingenious; artful, sly (OED 2,5) love seems here to conflate love = Cupid with love = the woman loved: both keep the speaker blind with tears so that the foul faults (l. 14) of both are obscured. However, foul faults seems more aptly to apply to the woman, as in 138.14.
- 14 eyes well seeing eyes which see truly

148

O me! What eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight?
Or if they have, where is my judgement fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote, 5
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote,
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
How can it? O how can love's eye be true,
That is so vexed with watching and with tears? 10
No marvel then though I mistake my view:
The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
O cunning love, with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Lest eyes well seeing thy foul faults should find.

- 149 The speaker is so acquiescent to his mistress's desires that he loves and hates those whom she loves and hates, even if that means hating himself.
- 2 partake take sides: OED 5, with this example. Sidney uses 'partakers' in the sense of 'supporters' in The Lady of May (Prose, 21).
- 4 all . . . sake Malone's insertion of commas on either side of all tyrant has been adopted. The address to the mistress as cruel, combined with the Petrarchan convention of identifying the mistress as a tyrant (cf. Sidney, AS, 5.85; Spenser, Amoretti, 10.5), support his interpretation: 'that is, for the sake of thee, thou tyrant'. However, if tyrant is not so marked off, the phrase may with some difficulty be read as suggesting 'Entirely for your sake, I am prepared to be a tyrant to anyone or everyone (including myself)', all being either the object of tyrant – 'to all' – or an adverb modifying it – 'entirely' – or both.
- 5 Who who is there who?
- 7 lour'st look on me angrily, scowl: cf. VA 75, 'still he lours and frets'. spend mete out; employ (OED 1, 8) but as Booth (523) observes, "'to spend revenge" is most unidiomatic', and 'This line is strange and strained generally'.
- 8 present moan immediate grief, or expression of grief
- 9 respect esteem, regard as valuable: see OED 4b; and cf. TGV 1.2.134.
- 10 'That is so proud as to despise being your servant' (Booth, 523)
- 11 all my best all that is best in me, as distinct from those parts that are so proud, as above
- worship thy defect adores your faults, possibly with a bawdy allusion to that which women lack, as distinct from the anatomical addition (20.11) which identifies the male; there may also be a sardonic echo of the BCP marriage service, 'with my body I thee worship' (293).
- 12 motion movement; ?persuasive force (OED 1a, 7b)
- 13–14 Booth (524) calls the couplet 'a sudden and arbitrary recurrence to the topic of sonnet 148 and an implied and not at all witty contradiction of 148.13–14'; yet, in so far as all the sonnets in the group 147–50 exemplify the speaker's love-blindness and love-madness, as well as analysing it, an arbitrary-seeming resolution is apt: we should not expect the speaker to be other than confused.
- 13 hate on persist in hating me.

149

Canst thou, O cruel, say I love thee not,
 When I against myself with thee partake?
 Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
 Am of myself, all, tyrant, for thy sake?
 Who hateth thee, that I do call my friend? 5
 On whom frown'st thou, that I do fawn upon?
 Nay, if thou lour'st on me, do I not spend
 Revenge upon myself with present moan?
 What merit do I in myself respect
 That is so proud thy service to despise, 10
 When all my best doth worship thy defect,
 Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
 But, love, hate on; for now I know thy mind:
 Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

+ all, tyrant,] this edn.: all tyrant, Malone; all tirant Q 7 lour'st] lowrst

- 150 The speaker ponders further on the woman's power to move him, through her very weaknesses, to praise her for beauties that his rational self knows her to lack. The sonnet bears some resemblance to Shakespeare's presentation of Cleopatra, praised by Antony even when she is quarrelsome (AC 1.1.48–51), and of whom Enobarbus says 'vilest things / Become themselves in her' (2.3.238–9).
- 1 from what power suggests the operation of an external, or supernatural, power, which gives the woman strength in weakness, as well as or instead of her own inner ability or capacity
- 2 to move my heart (to love you), or alter its direction, by means of inadequacy, incapacity: see OED insufficiency 2, 1a; and cf. MND 2.2.128, where Helena applies the word to her own supposed lack of beauty.
- 3 give . . . sight tell my eyesight, which sees correctly, that it does not
- 4 brightness . . . day suggests a denial of the propositions that brightness is what defines day, distinguishing it from night, and that bright sunshine, rather than clouds or shadow, are what grace an individual day, making it pleasing
- 5 this . . . ill this capacity to improve bad things, to make them appear pleasing; or to 'become' them by association with them. The first application is elliptical and unusual; the second supported by OED become 9c; and cf. its paradoxical application in TS 1.2.252–3.
- 5–7 The ill/skill rhyme here, combined with the picture of a blinded and enslaved lover, recalls the couplet of 57: 'So true a fool is love, that in your will, / Though you do anything, he thinks no ill'.
- 6 refuse that which is cast aside as worthless (OED 8. 1)
- 7 warrantise guarantee, surety
- 11 what . . . abhor that which others, who are not so blinded, have a conventional distaste for (i.e. things ill)
- 12 With others along with others, aligning yourself with the world in general abhor my state hate or despise the condition I am in: recalls the speaker's outcast state in 29.2. The iteration of abhor in ll. 11 and 12 suggests a play on 'whore': cf. Desdemona's 'I cannot say "whore": / It does abhor me now I speak the word' (Oth 4.2.160–2), where 'abhor' suggests 'compromise myself by appearing to name myself "whore"'; cf. also the executioner 'Abhorson' (a 'whoreson' character) in MM.
- 13–14 As Booth observes (525), this implies not only that 'my unselfish generosity has earned your love in return', but also that 'since you are unworthy and I find unworthiness lovable, I am a fitting person for you to love'. When the following sonnet has been read an innuendo may be discovered in raised.

150

O from what power hast thou this powerful might,
With insufficiency my heart to sway,
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill, 5
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill
That in my mind thy worst all best exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate? 10
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
 If thy unworthiness raised love in me,
 More worthy I to be beloved of thee.

- 151 This sonnet resumes (from 146) the conflict between soul and body, but with the body now unashamedly victorious. The iteration of conscience in ll. 1, 2 and 13 suggests a concealed pun on the prick of conscience and the prick which has no conscience, as in the proverb Penis erectus non habet conscientiam (Booth cites Archer Taylor, The Proverbs [Cambridge, Mass., 1931], 171).
- 1 Love here equated with the child Cupid conscience consciousness of right and wrong; moral sense (OED II); Booth (526) claims that 'here, and in lines 2, 11 and 13, "con-" alludes to 'the commonest name for the female sex organ'.
- 2 Though the who knows not . . . ? formula implies that the proposition is proverbial or familiar, it does not appear to be so: indeed, the surprisingness of a connection between erotic love and conscience is indicated in Falstaff's remark (MW 5.5.28-9) 'Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience: he makes restitution'. But there may be a saucily misapplied suggestion that conscience, or the inward prompting of a moral sense, is a product of the love of God.
- 3 gentle cheater an oxymoron in which the moral condemnation of cheater is mitigated by the affectionate epithet gentle; cf. tender churl, 1.12.
urge not do not charge me strongly with, or press a strong claim for: see OED urge 3c, 9a.
- 4 prove turn out to be
- 5 thou betraying me when, because, or since, you betray me
- 6 My nobler part the soul, as in l. 7; and cf. 'nobler parts', KJ 3.1.217, and 'nobler reason', Tem 5.1.26.
my . . . treason the treason of my body, which is gross – overfed and/or vicious: cf. the rebel powers of the body in 146.2.
- 7 may primarily, 'has permission to', but perhaps also suggesting 'it is possible that he will'
- 8 Triumph triumph: 'to prevail, gain the mastery' (OED 2) flesh an unusual application of the word, often associated with female flesh as a sexual commodity, to the male member stays waits for, awaits (OED 19); cf. MND 2.1.235, VA 894.
no further reason no additional cause or pretext; no longer (waits for) the guidance of reason
- 9 point out show, direct attention to (OED 10)
- 10 proud . . . pride an apparent tautology; but there may be an allusion to animals who are 'in pride', or sexually excited; cf. 'As salt as wolves in pride', Oth 3.3.410, and OED pride 11. The speaker's flesh exults in, or brags of, this tumescence.
- 12 stand a common pun on the military and sexual applications of the word: cf. RJ 1.1.27-8, Sampson's obscene threat to the maids, 'Me they shall feel while I am able to stand, and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh'. For the military application, 'to take up an offensive position against an enemy', see OED 10.
fall . . . side continues the metaphor of sexual congress as a military engagement, suggesting both 'endure defeat while fighting on your behalf' and 'detumescence in proximity to you'
- 13 No . . . it Do not reckon it to be a defect of conscience: cf. 'For nothing hold me', 136.11 and n.
- 14 rise and fall suggests, in addition to tumescence and detumescence, a blasphemous play on the Resurrection, as in Donne's 'The Canonization', 26-7: 'We die and rise the same, and prove / Mysterious by this love'. In the light of the two final sonnets, the reader may discover also an implication that the speaker has 'fallen' sexually through infection; cf. OED fall 14a, and IH4 3.3.1-3.

151

Love is too young to know what conscience is:
Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove;
For, thou betraying me, I do betray 5
My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no further reason,
But rising at thy name doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize, proud of this pride: 10
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her 'love', for whose dear love I rise and fall.

- 152 This sonnet describes sexual and artistic betrayal. The blunt allusions to double adultery grieved early commentators, such as George Ross, who claimed that Shakespeare's 'spirit was delicate and loved purity, yet it is obvious that it did not hinder him from lapsing into an unchaste life' (quoted in Rollins, 1.389). However, the poet's self-betrayal through false language is treated as worse even than sexual betrayal.
- 1 I am forsworn I have broken an oath or told a lie: may refer to the fact that the speaker, like Shakespeare, is married; or to his claims in 1–126 of exclusive devotion to the fair youth; or to the breach of some other oath not apparent to the reader.
 - 2 twice . . . swearing In your swearing love to me you break two oaths (thus behaving twice as badly as me): the present participle effectively leaves open the question of whether she swears love to the speaker now, or has done so in the past.
 - 3 In act in the act of sexual congress: elsewhere more fully defined, as in 'act of sport' or 'act of shame' (Oth 2.1.226, 5.2.212). In TC 3.2.81–2 it is used alone, as here: 'the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit'.
 - 3–4 new . . . bearing may be read as suggesting that the woman (unlike Shakespeare, married back in 1582) is recently married, and already expressing new hate for her husband, in favour of love for the speaker; or that she has betrayed both her husband and the speaker in favour of some third party, either, as in 133–4, the speaker's friend, or yet another
 - 7 to misuse thee to treat you badly, by deception or otherwise; to exploit you sexually; to lie about you, misrepresent you: for the first two senses of misuse, cf. OED 2 and 2b; the third is discovered in retrospect when ll. 9–12 have been read.
 - 8 initially suggests, 'all my amorous trust of you is betrayed'; but the next six lines indicate a more thoroughgoing compromise of the speaker's honest faith, in which he has told endless lies with reference to the woman.
 - 9 deep oaths . . . kindness Deep oaths, or solemn, heartfelt, oaths, are conventional: cf. LLL 1.1.23; or 'deep-sworn', KJ 3.1.231. The definition of oaths, in ll. 9–10, as oaths of – i.e. 'concerning' – subtly shifts the issue from one of fidelity to another person to fidelity to truth itself. The repetition of deep may introduce an innuendo on deep kindness as 'unlimited sexual receptivity'.
 - 11 to enlighten thee to illuminate you, or make you lighter in appearance (OED 2) gave . . . blindness initially suggests a reference to blind Cupid: cf. Sidney, NA, 5, 'Hath not she thrown reason upon our desires and, as it were, given eyes unto Cupid?' However, the couplet makes it clear that the eyes are those of the speaker, who has given (over) his eyes to blindness, in claiming to see merit and beauty in the woman.
 - 12 swear against give contrary evidence to; set up in opposition to the thing possibly with some play on the use of thing for 'genitals'; cf. IH4 3.3.114–18, and Son 136.7, 11–12.
 - 13 sworn thee fair sworn that you are beautiful; attempted to make you beautiful by swearing that you are eye often, since Malone, emended to 'I'; yet eye continues logically from l. 12, in which eyes are the subject of swear, while readily yielding an aural pun on 'I'; the word also yokes 152 to the last line of 153.
 - 14 foul plays paradoxically on the 'foulness' of a false claim for the woman's 'fairness'; and cf. the proverbial 'Fair without but foul within' (Tilley, F28).

152

In loving thee thou knowst I am forsworn;
But thou art twice forsworn to me love swearing,
In act thy bed-vow broke and new faith torn,
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee, 5
When I break twenty? I am perjured most,
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy, 10
And to enlighten thee gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see:
 For I have sworn thee fair: more perjured eye,
 To swear against the truth so foul a lie.

6 perjured] periur'd 13 perjured] periurde eye] I Malone

153–4 Both sonnets play on a conceit deriving from a six-line epigram by Marianus Scholasticus, a sixth-century Byzantine poet (cf. Cameron, 70–2), in the Greek Anthology 4.19.35, literally translated: ‘Here beneath these plane trees, exhausted Love was sleeping softly. He had entrusted his torch to the Nymphs. But the Nymphs said to one another, “Come on, why are we waiting? Let’s put out the torch and with it quench the fire in human hearts.” But the torch set light even to the waters, and the Nymphs of Love have filled the bath with hot water ever since.’ Or, in modern verse: ‘Beneath these plane trees Love lay fast asleep; / His torch was given to the Nymphs to keep. / “Why wait?” they said, “Let’s put out Cupid’s brand, / And quench the fire that burns the heart of man.” / But it inflamed the water, burnt the lot: / The baths the Nymphs of Love take now are hot.’ (Both versions by Emily Wilson, 1996). For a detailed discussion of possible sources, see Hutton. Ben Jonson owned a copy of the first Latin translation of the Greek Anthology, that of Lubinus, 1603 (Jonson, 11.598; Hutton, 385n.; see also McPherson). A possible route by which the epigram reached Shakespeare might be an English version of the epigram by Jonson himself, now lost, perhaps part of his projected Book II of Epigrammes. If this conjecture is right, the sonnets cannot have been written before 1603. Such a source would suit the competitive, exaggeratedly amplified rhetoric of 153–4. Although there were many other Latin and vernacular adaptations of the epigram from the early sixteenth century onwards (and cf. Giles Fletcher’s Licia (1593), 27, deriving from Angeriano’s 1512 epigram), Shakespeare’s sonnets seem closer to the Greek original than to any of the Latin or vernacular adaptations of it. Whether through Jonson or some other English intermediary, Shakespeare must have had access to a close rendering, such as that of Lubinus. Epigrams were often structured as pairs, with two different renderings of the same motif; indeed, Marianus’s epigram which is Shakespeare’s model is itself the second of a pair on baths with special properties, the preceding epigram being on one called ‘Eros’ made fragrant by being being bathed in by Venus.

In both sonnets Cupid’s brand is given a bawdy application, and both draw on the twofold association of hot baths with the treatment of sexually transmitted disease and with sexual encounters which may cause such disease, a double association which goes back to antiquity (cf. Martial, Epigrams, 11.80). The suggestion initiated by George Steevens and seconded by some later commentators, such as E.H. Plumptre, Gregor Sarrazin and E.I. Fripp (Rollins, 1.391–2), that the sonnets allude specifically to Bath, Buxton or some continental spa seems unnecessary, since in both sonnets it is my mistress who is defined as the physical location for hot water, therapy and disease.

- 153.1 laid . . . brand put aside his torch: a hymeneal torch, rather than a bow and arrows, was the more ancient attribute of Cupid: cf. Cym 2.4.91.
- 2 a maid of Dian’s either, if the scene is consistently mythological, one of the virgin nymphs who attended the chaste goddess Diana; or, by extension, any virgin
- 4 cold valley-fountain suggests both one of the cool springs associated with the goddess Diana, and the female genitals in which the hot male member seeks to be cooled or quenched: cf. Venus’ erotic invitation to Adonis: ‘Graze on my lips, and if those hills be dry, / Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie’ (VA 233–4). Cf. also Thomas Heywood’s Oenone and Paris (1594), 458, ‘Bathe in this fountaine here a while to sport thee’ (Heywood, 28).

153

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep;
 A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
 And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
 In a cold valley-fountain of that ground,
 Which borrowed from this holy fire of love 5
 A dateless lively heat still to endure,
 And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove
 Against strange maladies a sovereign cure:
 But at my mistress' eye love's brand new fired,
 The boy for trial needs would touch my breast; 10
 I, sick withal, the help of bath desired,
 And thither hied, a sad distempered guest,
 But found no cure; the bath for my help lies
 Where Cupid got new fire: my mistress' eye.

5 this . . . love the holy fire of Cupid's torch, whose 'holiness' seems here rather suspect: it may hint, spooneristically, at a 'fiery hole' (RP).

6 The tautology of this line matches the tautology of the paired sonnets: the water's heat remains without 'date' or terminus (cf. dateless night, 30.6, and 'dateless bargain', RJ 5.3.115), and has the capacity to remain so continually – still.

7 grew was transformed into a seething bath warm water in which bathers are 'seethed', or stewed: see OED seethe 1.

prove discover to be: the allusion may be not so much to a specific therapeutic spring as to a therapeutic principle – 'Men find hot baths an effective remedy.'

8 strange maladies suggests 'exotic' maladies, diseases possibly contracted through contact with strange, or foreign, women. Syphilis, 'pox', or morbus gallicus, was always viewed as an exotic disease, whether brought to

1 Cupid] CV pid 2 Dian's] Dyans 5 borrowed] borrowd 12 distempered] distemperd guest,] guest. 14 Cupid] Cupid eye] eyes Benson

- Italy or England from France, or to Europe from the New World, or even the other way round: cf. Fracastoro, 12–14.
- sovereign efficacious, potent: see OED 3.
- 9 new fired was ignited afresh: develops the Petrarchan conceit of the mistress's eyes as darting forth fiery beams, as in the 'flamie glistening lights' of Stella's eyes in Sidney's AS, 76.10, a particularly erotically-charged sonnet.
- 10 for trial to test (whether his torch was still alight) touch with a suggestion of 'infect, taint' (OED 7); and cf. KJ 5.8.2, 'It is too late, the life of all his blood / Is touch'd corruptibly'.
- 11 withal from contact with Cupid's brand help . . . desired sought for therapy of the warm and supposedly curative waters: sweating tubs were used in the treatment of venereal disease, as in Timon's verbal onslaught on the courtesan Timandra: 'Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves / For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd youth / To the tub-fast and the diet' (Tim 4.3.86–8).
- 12 hied hastened, betook myself speedily; see OED hie 2b.
- 14 distempered disordered, diseased; insane (OED 3.4) my mistress' eye Q's singular 'eye' has been retained, despite its imperfect rhyme with lies, for the following reasons: (1) it matches the perjured eye of 152.13; (2) it repeats the phrase in identical form from l. 9; (3) in its singular form only, it suggests an allusion to what Chaucer called the 'nether ye' (Miller's Tale, 3852; and cf. OED eye 20, 'A hole or aperture'); (4) the imperfection of the rhyme matches the poem's theme of disappointment and disillusion: in seeking to cure himself, the speaker reinfects himself.

153

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep;
A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground,
Which borrowed from this holy fire of love 5
A dateless lively heat still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove
Against strange maladies a sovereign cure:
But at my mistress' eye love's brand new fired,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast; 10
I, sick withal, the help of bath desired,
And thither hied, a sad distempered guest,
 But found no cure; the bath for my help lies
 Where Cupid got new fire: my mistress' eye.

154 See 153 headnote.

- 2 Laid . . . side conflates laid from the preceding sonnet with 'fall by thy side' from 151.12, thus suggesting the brand's phallic character, and explaining the apparent absurdity pointed out by Hutton (401) in ll. 1–2, which 'makes the love-god in his sleep perform the act of laying aside his brand': the laying-by may correspond with involuntary detumescence.
- 5 The fairest votary the most beautiful devotee (of chastity and/or Diana); refines on the more random-sounding maid of Dian's in 153.2, allowing for a possibility that Cupid's assailant is Diana herself: see OED votary 1 a, b.
- 6 legions multitudes, large numbers (OED 3a): in its allusion to Roman legions, supports the classical character of the anecdote, as well as the military image in the next line
- 7 general . . . desire As Booth (536) observes, this phrase can be read almost simultaneously as defining Cupid as the general, or supreme commander (OED 7a), of hot desire, and, when taken in conjunction with the following lines, as describing him as disarmed, or deprived, of the hot desire (brand) which was formerly his defining attribute. For the erotic application of general, cf. 'Our general's wife is now the general', Oth 2.3.305–6.
- 8 Cf. Ham 1.5.74–5: 'Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand/Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch'd' (RP).
- 9 quenched quenched
a . . . by The cool well which is by, = nearby (OED by adv. 1a), the fair votary probably carries an innuendo on the female organ in which the hot desire of the male is quenched: cf.

153.4n. and quotations.

- 11 Growing becoming, developing into: see OED grow 4.
a bath a warm bath, a therapeutic spring
- 12 my mistress' thrall The enslavement of the speaker to his mistress is perhaps distinguished from the more general allegiance of 'legions of true hearts' in l. 6.
- 13 Came with a play on 'reach orgasm': although OED's earliest example (17) is from 1650, Partridge (89) identifies the sense in MA 5.2.20–2 and TN 3.4.29–30; to these could possibly be added AC 5.2.286.
this . . . prove The following is what I discover by means of that experience.
- 14 Love's fire heats water The point that Cupid's brand has the capacity to transform a cool spring into a hot one is by now rather obvious, but there is probably also an allusion to the burning water, or urine, which is a common symptom of venereal disease.
water cools not love Cf. Song of Solomon, 8.7, 'Many waters cannot drown love'; however, the pervasive bawdy innuendo suggests a more brutal implication that neither venereal disease nor the treatment of it abates the sex-drive. Like LC, the sonnets end with an affirmation of the persistence of desire: see Introduction, p. 95.
- FINIS. As well as marking the end of the sonnet sequence, the 'FINIS' may hint at an allusion to the miraculous draught of fishes in St John's Gospel, 21.11, 'an hundred and fiftie and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken', at least if the non-sonnet 126 is left out of the reckoning: see Introduction, p. 98.

154

The little love-god lying once asleep,
 Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
 Whilst many nymphs, that vowed chaste life to keep,
 Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
 The fairest votary took up that fire 5
 Which many legions of true hearts had warmed;
 And so the general of hot desire
 Was, sleeping, by a virgin hand disarmed.
 This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
 Which from love's fire took heat perpetual, 10
 Growing a bath and healthful remedy
 For men diseased; but I, my mistress' thrall,
 Came there for cure, and this by that I prove:
 Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

FINIS.

1 love-god] Loue-God 3 nymphs] Nymphes vowed] you'd 6 legions] Legions warmed] warm'd 7 general] Generall 8 virgin] Virgin disarmed] disarm'd 9 well] Well 12 diseased]
 diseasd mistress'] Mistrisse

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT

From off a hill whose concave womb reworded
 A plaintful story from a sist'ring vale,
 My spirits t'attend this double voice accorded,
 And down I laid to list the sad-tuned tale;
 Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale,
 Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
 Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

5

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT This is a complex example of the female-voiced 'complaint', in rime royal, often added to sonnet sequences from Daniel's Complaint of Rosamund, appended to Delia (1592), onwards; cf. also Thomas Lodge's Complaint of Elstred, which follows Phyllis (1593); Michael Drayton's Matilda the faire, following Ideas Mirrour (1594); and Richard Barnfield's Cassandra, following The Affectionate Shepherd (1595). Uniquely, however, Shakespeare's fickle maid (l. 5) is unnamed, as are the three other characters, the reverend man (52), once a courtier, who acts as her confessor; her youthful seducer; and the nun (232) who tried to seduce him. The opening two stanzas, in the voice of an I who is also unidentified, set the scene; in the next fifteen, ll. 71–175, the maid describes her attraction to the young man; his wooing speeches are reported in a further fifteen stanzas, 176–280; and in the final seven stanzas, 281–329, the maid exclaims at the irresistibly beguiling power of the youth's words and tears, to which she would willingly submit once more.

TITLE The title will naturally be read initially as denoting 'a complaint by a lover'. The application of the word to a woman, though uncommon, was not unknown in this period. OED (2a) offers the example of Crispinus's song in Jonson's Poetaster, 2.2.163–5: 'If I freely may discover / What would please me in my lover: / I would have her faire, and wittie'; cf. also AYL 5.2.74–5. But by the time the poem is read to the end, the title can be glossed also as 'a complaint concerning a lover'. It might be tempting also to read it as 'the disease of a lover', since the speaker has been disordered by the infected moisture (l. 323) of the youth's eye, but OED (6) does not record this sense of complaint before 1705.

- 1–7 The opening stanza strongly recalls the folk-song: 'Early one morning, just as the day was dawning, / I heard a maid sing in the valley below: / O, don't deceive me, O, never leave me, / How could you use a poor maiden so?'
- 1 From off off from, resounding from concave womb a hollow cave: the use of the word womb in the opening line immediately suggests the feminine complementarity of LC to the male-voiced sonnets which precede it, especially sonnets 151, with its play on male flesh, and 153–4, on Cupid's phallic brand.
- reworded resonated, reiterated: cf. Ham 3.4.144–5, 'Bring me to the test, / And I the matter will re-word'.
- 2 plaintful mournful; in the form of a complaint
- sist'ring 'having a relationship comparable in some way to that of a sister or sisters' (OED); and note OED's quotation from William Drummond, 'The Roman was almost naked from the Waste upwards, discovering the sisting Apples of her Breast.'
- 7 her world the 'little world of (wo)man', her body as a microcosm

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT] A Louers complaint. BY WILLIAM SHAKE-SPEARE. 4 sad-tuned] Oxf: sad tun'd Q 6 a-twain] Malone; a twaine Q 7 sorrow's] sorrowes, Upon her head a plaited hive of straw,

 Which fortified her visage from the sun,
 Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw 10
 The carcass of a beauty spent and done;
 Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
 Nor youth all quit, but spite of heaven's fell rage
 Some beauty peeped through lattice of seared age.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne, 15
 Which on it had conceited characters,
 Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
 That seasoned woe had pelleted in tears,
 And often reading what contents it bears;
 As often shrieking undistinguished woe, 20
 In clamours of all size, both high and low.

- 8 hive a high-crowned straw hat: Linthicum (231) claims that 'The straw hat does not seem to have been worn by any except country folk during Shakespeare's age', and Sir John Harington's epigram 4.91, 'In commendation of a straw, written at the request of a great Lady, that ware a straw Hat at the Court' (Harington, 285), seems to confirm this; yet a straw hat survives at Hatfield House allegedly worn by Elizabeth when a prisoner there.
- 10 the thought the thought or mind (of an onlooker)
- 11 carcass the dead body, or surviving relics, of her former beauty
- 12 scythed scythèd: cut away with his scythe
- 13 heaven's fell rage Cf. time's fell hand, 64.1.
- 14 lattice often applied figuratively to the face, or to eyes gazing out of the face's lattice: OED cites Donne's Second Anniversarie, 296–7: 'Thou shalt not peep through lattices of eyes, / Nor hear through labyrinths of ears'.
- seared withered, blighted (Glossary)
- 16 conceited characters witty or inventive letters (synecdoche for 'words'): the epithet was often applied to Shakespeare's own writings, as in Thomas Edwards's Narcissus (1595); and cf. RJ (First Quarto), entitled An excellent conceited Tragedy; or TC (Quarto), unrevised title-page, . . . with the conceited wooing of Pandarus Prince of Licia.
- 17 silken figures suggests emblematic images, as well as words, embroidered on the napkin; cf. Glossary, 'figure', 6.
- 18 seasoned established, of long duration (OED 7), perhaps with a play on 'flavoured, spiced' (OED 2)
- pelleted formed into pellets or small globular shapes, and/or discharged like gunshot
- 19 contents contents
- 20 undistinguished indistinguishable, indefinable; cf. KL 4.6.271, 'O indistinguished space of woman's will!'
- 21 both . . . low Cf. l. 3 of the song 'O mistress mine', TN 2.3: 'That can

8 plaited] plattid 9 sun] Sunne 14 peeped] peept lattice] lettice seared] sear'd 15 napkin] Napkin 20 undistinguished] vndistinguisht

Sometimes her levelled eyes their carriage ride,
 As they did batt'ry to the spheres intend;
 Sometime, diverted, their poor balls are tied
 To th'orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend 25
 Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
 To every place at once, and nowhere fixed,
 The mind and sight distractedly commixed.

Her hair, nor loose, nor tied in formal plait,
 Proclaimed in her a careless hand of pride; 30
 For some untucked descended her sheaved hat,
 Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
 Some in her threaten fillet still did bide,
 And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
 Though slackly braided in loose negligence. 35

sing both high and low'. The line as a whole suggests some mockery or burlesque; whether of the fickle maid, or of the conventions of oxymoronic rhetoric, is hard to judge.

22 levelled . . . ride The image is of warfare, with the maid's eyes as movable cannon aimed, or levelled (OED level 7a), and wheeled into position ready for discharge (OED carriage 27).

23 As as if batt'ry assault, continuing the metaphor of cannon-fire

24 balls eyeballs, neatly reducing the image of eyes as guns firing balls to one of sockets in which the balls are tied down; for 'balls' as 'eyeballs', cf. MV 3.2.118, AC 2.5.64.

25 th'orb'd th'orb'd: the image of the earth as an 'orb', or sphere, continues the imagery of spherical objects, from pelleted tears in l. 18, heavens as spheres in 23, and eyes as balls in 24.

26 right on straight ahead

28 anon next

commixed mingled

29–35 Cf. Sidney's description of the disguised Pyrocles in NA (68): 'Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in fairest quantity, in locks, some curled and some as it were forgotten, with such a careless care and an art so hiding art that she seemed she would lay them for a pattern, whether nature simply, or nature helped by cunning, be the more excellent; the rest whereof was drawn into a coronet of gold'.

30 careless . . . pride presumably, 'a hand neglectful, or heedless, of pride'

31 sheaved composed of sheaves (of straw); nonce word

32 pined pinèd.

33 threaten fillet a 'little long band or narowe ribben wherewith women doe wreathe or bind theire haire' (John Baret, An Alvearie or Quadruple Dictionarie (1580), quoted in Linthicum, 236): in this case made of threads, possibly gold, rather than ribbon

22 levelled] leueld 24 tied] tide 27 fixed] fixt 28 commixed] commxit 29 tied] ti'd
 30 Proclaimed] Proclaimd 31 untucked] vntuck'd sheaved] sheu'd

A thousand favours from a maund she drew,
 Of amber, crystal and of beaded jet,
 Which, one by one, she in a river threw,
 Upon whose weeping margent she was set,
 Like usury, applying wet to wet, 40
 Or monarch's hands, that lets not bounty fall
 Where want cries 'Some!', but where excess begs, 'All!'

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
 Which she perused, sighed, tore and gave the flood;
 Cracked many a ring of posied gold and bone, 45
 Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
 Found yet moe letters, sadly penned in blood,
 With sleided silk, feat and affectedly
 Enswathed and sealed to curious secrecy.

These often bathed she in her fluxive eyes, 50
 And often kissed, and often gave to tear;

- 36 favours love tokens, in this instance made of semi-precious minerals: see OED favour 7a, b; and cf. LLL 5.2.130–2.
 maund wicker basket with a handle
 37 beaded presumably, 'formed into beads'; another nonce word
 39 margent edge, bank
 40 The maid's barren usury, in which she adds coin-like tears to the stream which already has water in abundance, may be contrasted with the reproductive usury recommended to the youth in 6.5.
 41–2 lets . . . 'All!' For the unusual use of 'let fall' as 'bestow (blessings or bounty)', cf. Tem 4.1.18; with the notion of giving to those who already have too much, rather than to the needy, cf. Son 135.9–10; also Donne's 'The Will', in which the speaker promises to give 'To women or the sea, my tears', having been taught by love to 'give to none, but such, as had too much before' (Songs and Sonnets, 54).
 43 schedules pieces of paper, short notes (OED 1)
 44 gave gave (to)
 45 posied inscribed with posies or mottoes; nonce word in the period
 48 sleided apparently for 'sleaved', = separated into loose threads: cf. Per 4 Prol. 21.
 feat and affectedly neatly, becomingly (OED feat 6b); earnestly or affectionately (OED affectedly 1): the association of affectedly with falsity or posing is not recorded before 1656.
 49 wrapped up (in frayed silk) and sealed to achieve elaborate secrecy, or against those who are curious to penetrate their secrets
 50 fluxive flowing, fluid
 51 gave to tear gave herself up to tearing: see OED give 64d.

37 beaded jet] Arđ: bedded let Q 41 monarch's] Monarches 44 perused] perus'd sighed] sighd
 45 Cracked] Crackt posied] Posied 46 sepulchres] sepulchers 47 moe] Arđ, Riv; mo Q; more
Malone penned] pend 49 Enswathed] Enswath'd sealed] seald 50 bathed] bath'd 51 kissed] kist

Cried, 'O false blood, thou register of lies,
 What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
 Ink would have seemed more black and damned here.'
 This said, in top of rage the lines she rents, 55
 Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man, that grazed his cattle nigh,
 Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
 Of court, of city, and had let go by
 The swiftest hours observed as they flew, 60
 Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew,
 And, privileged by age, desires to know
 In brief the grounds and motives of her woe.

52 register of lies chronicle or record of lies: cf. Lucrece's complaint against night as 'Dim register and notary of shame', Luc 765.

53 unapproved unapproved: = unconfirmed by trial, unproved (Glossary)

54 Black ink, manifestly sinister, would have been more honest than seemingly heartfelt blood.

damned damnèd

55 rents rends, tears

56 contents contènts

57 reverend dignified, aged, with some religious associations which make him an apt confessor-figure (OED 1, 2); however, the stress on the man's age in 62 and 70 make this the primary connotation. The witnessing I of the opening stanzas is presumably different; see Introduction, p. 92.

58 blusterer 'boaster, braggart' (OED, with this as the first example) ruffle ostentatious bustle, display (OED 3, with this as the first example); the word was also associated with quarrels and skirmishes; cf. Robert Naunton, Fragmenta Regalia (1641), 33, on Lord Hunsdon, patron of the Lord Chamberlain's Men, 'as he lived in a Roughling time, so he loved sword and Buckler men, and such as our Fathers were wont to call men of their hands'.

60 observed observèd. In his 'blustering' days we might suppose, rather, that the man would have passed his hours 'unobserved'; but presumably the suggestion is that even in his youth he was unusually reflective.

61 afflicted fancy unhappy apparition (OED fancy 2), or victim of delusion (ibid. 3)

fastly firmly; speedily (OED 2, 4)

63 grounds and motives causes and inward promptings or desires (OED motive 2a, 4a; and cf. Kerrigan, Motives, vi).

54 seemed] seem'd 57 grazed] graz'd 59 court] Court city] Cittie 62 privileged] priuiledg'd

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
 And comely distant sits he by her side, 65
 When he again desires her, being sat,
 Her grievance with his hearing to divide:
 If that from him there may be aught applied
 Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
 'Tis promised in the charity of age. 70

'Father,' she says, 'though in me ye behold
 The injury of many a blasting hour,
 Let it not tell your judgement I am old:
 Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power.
 I might as yet have been a spreading flower, 75
 Fresh to myself, if I had self-applied
 Love to myself, and to no love beside.

'But woe is me! Too early I attended
 A youthful suit; it was to gain my grace;
 O, one by nature's outwards so commended 80

64 grained bat the object may be akin to Aufidius's 'grained ash', Cor 4.5.109, apparently a stout wooden lance or cudgel. A 'bat' is normally a wooden walking stick (OED 1): cf. Spenser, Mother Hubberds Tale (1591), 215–18, in which the ape pretends to be an old soldier: 'But neither sword nor dagger did he beare . . . / In stead of them a handsome bat he held, / On which he leaned, as one farre in elde' (Shorter Poems, 342).
grained grained

65 comely distant becomingly distant, at a discreet distance

67 divide share (OED 8b)

68 applied offered as a remedy

72 blasting blighting (OED 1): cf. TGV 1.1.45–9: 'as the most forward bud / Is eaten by the canker ere it blow, /

Even so by Love the young and tender wit / Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud, / Losing his verdure, even in the prime'.

76 Fresh to myself Cf. 94. 9–10.

77 The maid has suffered for doing what the youth is implored to do in sonnets 1–17: contrast especially sonnet 4.

78 attended initially suggests that, like the reverend man when young, the maid attended at court; but the next line indicates that it was to the youthful suit that she paid heed (OED attend 7, 2).

79 A youthful suit the request of a youthful suitor

80 outwards exterior, outward appearance: see OED outward B2; and cf. TC 3.2.169; Cym 1.1.23.

70 promised] promist 73 judgement] Iudgement 76 self-applied] selfe applied 77 love] Loue
 79 suit it (*Ard*² suit; it)

That maidens' eyes stuck over all his face;
 Love lacked a dwelling, and made him her place;
 And when in his fair parts she did abide
 She was new-lodged and newly deified.

'His browny locks did hang in crooked curls, 85
 And every light occasion of the wind
 Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls;
 What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find;
 Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind:
 For on his visage was in little drawn 90
 What largeness thinks in paradise was sawn.

'Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
 His phoenix down began but to appear,
 Like unshorn velvet, on that termless skin,

81 Cf. the suggestions in sonnets 3 and 16 of numbers of young women longing to be made pregnant by the youth; and cf. 'the eyes of all that were in the synagogue were fastened on him', Luke, 4.20.

82-4 her . . . deified The female pronoun indicates that Love is here equated with the goddess Venus.

85-98 This passage seems to amalgamate Sidney's descriptions of the two princes Musidorus and Pyrocles (OA, 376-7): 'His fair auburn hair (which he ware in great length, and gave at that time a delightful show with being stirred up and down with the breath of a gentle wind) . . . his face, now beginning to have some tokens of a beard, was composed to a kind of manlike beauty; his colour was of a well pleasing brownness . . . Pyrocles of a pure complexion, and of such a cheerful favour as might seem either a woman's face on a boy or an excellent boy's face in a woman'.

85 browny inclining to brown (OED)

87 parcels parts, portions

90-1 His face had depicted on it a miniature of that which, in amplified form, (a beholder) might imagine to have been cut out, or carved, in Paradise (OED sawn 1): though we may also construe sawn as a clumsy form of 'seen', there is no analogy to this, and 'sawing' offers not merely a better rhyme, but a better semantic analogy, to 'draw' (n.). Cf. Sidney's description of Amphialus (NA, 195) as 'such a right manlike man as nature, often erring, yet shows she would fain make'.

93 phoenix down facial hair resembling the glorious plumage of the Phoenix; perhaps also hair which, like the Phoenix, dies (when the youth shaves) and is self-renewed: for the association of the Phoenix with bright plumage, cf. Tim 2.1.31.

94 unshorn velvet velvet which has not been trimmed, or shaved termless inexpressible, beyond description (OED 2); cf. phraseless, l. 225.

82 lacked] lackt 84 new-lodged] Oxf; new lodg'd Q deified] Malone; Deified Q

Whose bare out-bragged the web it seemed to wear; 95
 Yet showed his visage by that cost more dear,
 And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
 If best were as it was, or best without.

'His qualities were beauteous as his form:
 For maiden-tongued he was, and thereof free; 100
 Yet if men moved him, was he such a storm
 As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
 When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.
 His rudeness so with his authorized youth
 Did livery falseness in a pride of truth. 105

'Well could he ride, and often men would say,
 "That horse his mettle from his rider takes,
 Proud of subjection, noble by the sway,

95 whose bareness was more triumphantly beautiful than the (rich) fabric it seemed to wear: the Sidneian conceit of some of the face being bare, some hairy, recalls the description of the maid's hair, some loose, some tied up, in ll. 29–35; out-bragged recalls both outbraves, 94.12, and 'nor shall death brag', 18.11.
 96 cost expensive ornament (OED 4); cf. 64.2.
 97–8 Cf. the passage from Sidney (NA, 68) quoted above, ll. 29–35n.
 97 nice fastidious, discriminating (OED 12a, b)
 98 If best were whether (the youth's chin) were best 100 maiden-tongued with a soft, gentle voice, like that of a maiden free generous, liberal (OED 21a, b)
 101 moved provoked to anger: cf. Brutus' description of Martius (Coriolanus), Cor 1.1.255: 'Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods'.

101–3 was . . . be His anger was at once violent and sensuous, like the Rough winds which 'shake the darling buds of May' in 18.3.
 104 rudeness . . . youth continues oxymoronic conceit: the young man's harshness (rudeness) combined with the youth which legitimated (authorized) it to veil (his) deception behind a splendid appearance (pride) of sincerity
 106–12 Cf. Pamela's praise of Dorus's riding (Sidney, NA, 153): 'he ever going so just, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind . . . sometimes making him turn close to the ground like a cat when scratchingly she wheels about after a mouse, sometimes with a little more rising before, now like a raven, leaping from ridge to ridge'.
 108 noble . . . sway ennobled by the youth's sovereignty over him

95 out-bragged] out-brag'd seemed] seem'd wear] were 100 maiden-tongued] maiden tongu'd
 101 moved] mou'd 103 breathe] breath 104 authorized] authoriz'd

What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes!"

And controversy hence a question takes, 110
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage, by th' well-doing steed.

'But quickly on this side the verdict went:
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament, 115
Accomplished in himself, not in his case;
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions; yet their purposed trim
Pieced not his grace, but were all graced by him.

'So on the tip of his subduing tongue 120
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep,
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep:
He had the dialect and different skill, 125
Catching all passions in his craft of will.

110 controversy controversy: disputation on a matter of opinion (between opponents) (OED 1b)

112 manage trained movements (of a horse) (OED 2); cf. AYL 1.1.13.

114 real habitude true character or disposition (OED habitude, with this example)

115 appertainings 'belongings, appurtenances' (OED, this example only)

116 case container, outward clothing

118 trim adornment, trappings

119 Pieced not did not add to or augment; cf. H5 Prol. 23, 'Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts'; also TC 3.1.51.

122 All replication prompt all quick replies

125 dialect (effective) manner of speaking (OED 1); cf. MM 1.2.172-3, 'in her youth / There is a prone and speechless dialect / Such as move men'.

126 The image of the youth Catching the passions of his hearers through his versatile rhetoric recalls the image of Hercules drawing people along with chains from his mouth, which appears in Andrea Alciati's Emblemata (1531), E6, as well as in many other emblem books.

112 manage] mannad'g, by th' well-doing steed] by'th wel doing Steed 116 Accomplished] Accomplisht himself] him-selfe 117 themselves] them-selves 118 Came]Ard'; Can purposed] purpos'd 119 Pieced] Peee'd graced] grac'd

'That he did in the general bosom reign
 Of young, of old, and sexes both enchanted
 To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
 In personal duty, following where he haunted; 130
 Consent's bewitched, ere he desire have granted,
 And dialogued for him what he would say,
 Asked their own wills, and made their wills obey.

'Many there were that did his picture get
 To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind, 135
 Like fools, that in th'imagination set
 The goodly objects which abroad they find,
 Of lands and mansions, theirs in thought assigned,
 And labouring in moe pleasures to bestow them
 Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them. 140

'So many have, that never touched his hand,
 Sweetly supposed them mistress of his heart:
 My woeful self that did in freedom stand,
 And was my own fee-simple, not in part,
 What with his art in youth, and youth in art, 145
 Threw my affections in his charmed power,
 Reserved the stalk and gave him all my flower.

127 That so that the general bosom Cf. 31.1.

130 haunted spent his time, habitually resorted

131 'The loving consent (of those who encountered him) was won by enchantment before he had even acknowledged his desires.'

132 dialogued expressed in dialogue form (OED 3, with this example)

134 get procure, obtain

136-40 'Like fools who imagine themselves owners of fine lands and houses they have only seen, and bestow more labour (in imagination) in improving their amenity than does the true and decrepit owner' (RP).

139 bestow confer (pleasures on) (OED 6)

140 owe own, possess

144 my own fee-simple my absolute possession, owned without limitation (OED fee-simple a): continues, from ll. 136-40, the metaphor of land tenure

146 charmed charmed

147 stalk . . . flower plays on the association of a flower with virginity, as in the description of Marina, Per 4.6.32-40, as a 'rose', one 'which grows to the stalk; never pluck'd yet'

131 bewitched] bewicht 132 dialogued] dialogu'd 133 Asked] Askt 138 assigned] assign'd 140 landlord] Land-lord 141 touched] toucht 142 supposed] suppos'd 144 fee-simple, not in part,] fee simple (not in part) 147 Reserved] Reserv'd

'Yet did I not, as some, my equals, did,
Demand of him; nor, being desired, yielded,
Finding myself in honour so forbid: 150
With safest distance I mine honour shielded.
Experience for me many bulwarks builed
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remained the foil
Of this false jewel and his amorous spoil.

'But ah! Who ever shunned by precedent 155
The destined ill she must herself assay,
Or forced examples 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-passed perils in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay:
For when we rage, advice is often seen 160
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

'Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood
That we must curb it upon others' proof,
To be forebode the sweets that seems so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behoof: 165
O appetite, from judgement stand aloof!
The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though reason weep and cry, "It is thy last!"

149 desired desirèd: requested (sexual) favour

153 proofs new-bleeding elliptical for 'instances of newly wounded (perhaps = deflowered) girls who had been less careful to protect themselves'

foil the dull metal which set off the young man's jewel-like splendour; the evidence of his ability to foil, or overcome, many women

155-6 Cf. Spenser, FQ, 3.xxvii.1-2: 'But ah, who can deceive his destiny, / Or weene by warning to auoyd his fate?', which is applied to the warning to Marinell to avoid 'The love of women'. Assay = test out by experience (OED 1a).

157 forced attached importance to, cared for (OED 14)

159 Counsel sage advice

162 blood fleshly nature, sexual appetite (OED 6, with this example): cf. l. 184.

164 forebode forbidden sweets sexual delights: cf. 'saucy sweetness', MM 2.4.45

165 in our behoof on our behalf, in defence of our own moral welfare

151 shielded.] sheilded, 153 new-bleeding] new bleeding remained] remaind 154 jewel] Iewell
155 shunned] shun'd 156 destined] destin'd 157 forced] forc'd 158 by-passed] by-past
164 forebode] forbod

'For further, I could say, "This man's untrue",
 And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling; 170
 Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew;
 Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
 Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
 Thought characters and words merely but art,
 And bastards of his foul adulterate heart. 175

'And long upon these terms I held my city,
 Till thus he 'gan besiege me: "Gentle maid,
 Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity
 And be not of my holy vows afraid:
 That's to ye sworn to none was ever said, 180
 For feasts of love I have been called unto,
 Till now, did ne'er invite, nor never woo.

"All my offences that abroad you see
 Are errors of the blood, none of the mind:
 Love made them not; with acture they may be 185

171 his . . . grew implies that the youth had made women pregnant: cf. the 'many maiden gardens, yet unset' of 16.6-7. The use of orchards, rather than 'gardens', activates also a suggestion of forbidden fruit, both stolen and planted.

173 vows . . . defiling (his) oaths were always agents of sexual/moral corruption: cf. 'men's vows are women's traitors', Cym 3.4.54.

174 characters and words words and letters: cf. the embroidered conceited characters of l. 16.

merely but art no more than artifice, guile (OED art 14); cf. l. 295.

176 city virginity, chastity: cf. 'this blemish'd fort', Luc 1175.

179 holy vows sacred (seeming) oaths: suggests that the youth is well aware that the maid has observed his deception of other women. There may also be a sexual innuendo in holy – cf. 153.5 and AW 1.3.30 – in addition to a suggestion of 'holey', or leaky, unreliable vows.

180 What is (now) sworn to you was never said (previously) to anyone.

181 feasts of love like the sensual feast of 141.8, may recall the commanding metaphor of Chapman's Ovids Banquet of Sence (1595)

184 blood Cf. l. 162 and n.

185 acture the process of acting; action (OED, this example only): the word sounds quasi-legal, but is not easy to explain in its context. Perhaps the suggestion is that 'acts of sex may be engaged in (readily) in situations where neither party is faithful or loving'.

171 orchards] Orchards 174 characters] Characters 176 city] City 181 called] call'd 182 woo] Capell; vow Q, Riv

Where neither party is nor true nor kind;
 They sought their shame that so their shame did find,
 And so much less of shame in me remains,
 By how much of me their reproach contains.

“Among the many that mine eyes have seen, 190
 Not one whose flame my heart so much as warmed,
 Or my affection put to th’ smallest teen,
 Or any of my leisures ever charmed:
 Harm have I done to them, but ne’er was harmed;
 Kept hearts in liveries, but my own was free, 195
 And reigned commanding in his monarchy.

“Look here what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
 Of pallid pearls and rubies red as blood,
 Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
 Of grief and blushes, aptly understood, 200

187–9 The youth, as reported, seems to have befuddled the maid with quasi-legal quibbling on the word shame as, in its first occurrence, ‘disgrace’ (OED 3a); in its second, ‘(act of) shame’ (OED 3b); and in its third ‘modesty, shamefastness’ (OED 2). The contorted reasoning of 188–9 appears to be that, since his cast-off mistresses are as guilty as he is, the more they reproach him, the more he is exonerated.

191 Not one (there was) not one

192 teen injury, damage (OED 1)

194 harmed heartbroken, or injured emotionally: cf. MA 2.3.26–30, where Benedick boasts of his heart-wholeness: ‘One woman is fair, yet I am well; another wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace’.

195 in liveries in service, as retainer; cf.

OED livery 3b, ‘under livery’.

197 wounded fancies ellipsis for ‘women wounded in their fancy’: cf. the description of the fickle maid as an afflicted fancy (l. 61 and n.)

199–203 The pearl and ruby jewels, resembling the conceited and posied love tokens of ll. 16 and 45, yield a complex conceit of conflicting emotions, with the pale pearls suggesting pain and chastity, the blood-red rubies shame and rage (mood = anger, as in OED 2b); and the conflict between the two serving as external token of the opposing armies Encamped within the girls’ bosoms. Cf. Sidney’s description of Amphialus visiting the girl with whom he is painfully in love (NA, 321): ‘About his neck, he wore a broad and gorgeous collar, whereof, the pieces interchangeably answering, the one was of diamonds and pearl set

186 party] Party 192 th’] th, 193 charmed] Charmed 196 reigned] raignd 197 here] heare
 198 pallid] palyd

In bloodless white and the encrimsoned mood,
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamped in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

“And lo! Behold these talons of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously empleached, 205
I have received from many a several fair,
Their kind acceptance weepingly beseeched,
With th’annexions of fair gems enriched,
And deep-brained sonnets, that did amplify
Each stone’s dear nature, worth and quality. 210

“The diamond? Why, ’twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invised properties did tend:
The deep green emerald, in whose fresh regard with a white enamel . . . and the other piece, being of rubies and opals, had a fiery glistening – which he thought pictured the two passions of fear and desire, wherein he was enchained’.

- 204 talons Though Q’s ‘talents’ has been previously glossed as ‘coins’, as in the Parable of the Talents (Matthew, 25.14–30), this is the regular Elizabethan spelling of talons = claws: cf. LLL 4.2.64, ‘If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent’. The reference is probably to claw-shaped brooches or pendants woven with hair interlaced with gold or silver wire. Weaving hair and twisted metal (205) around a coin would pose practical problems, as well as masking the coin’s value; additionally, claw-shaped jewels suggest the amorously predatory aspirations of the givers.
- 205 empleached interwoven, intertwined, from ‘pleach’ (OED 1a, b), most often applied to the twisting or interlacing of branches or vine-stems; cf. MA 3.1.7, ‘pleached bower’.

- 208 annexions adjuncts, additions (OED’s earliest example, under sense 2)
- 209 deep-brained sonnets profoundly pondered, equipped with thought: cf. the odd use of ‘brain’ in Cym 5.4.147, ‘Such stuff as madmen tongue and brain not’.
- 210 dear precious; inherent
- 212 his its
invised nonce word, presumably denoting ‘unseen’ (OED); however, Q’s ‘inuis’d’ could possibly be a compositorial misreading of ‘invi’d’ or ‘invied’, = envied, admired.
- 213–14 emerald . . . amend Cf. Philemon Holland, trans., Pliny, The Historie of the Worlde (1601), Book 37, chapter 5: ‘True it is, that we take great delight to behold greene hearbes and leaves of trees, but this is nothing to the pleasure wee have in looking upon the Emeraud, for compare it

201 encrimsoned] encrimson'd 203 Encamped] Encampt 204 lo!] Lo talons] tallents hair] heir
205 metal . . . empleached] mettle . . . empleacht 206 received] receau'd 207 beseeched] beseecht
208 enriched] inricht 209 deep-brained] deepe brain'd 210 nature] Nature 211 diamond]
Diamond 212 invised] Oxf; inuis'd Q 213 emerald] Emrald

Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
 The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend 215
 With objects manifold; each several stone
 With wit well-blazoned smiled, or made some moan.

‘‘Lo, all these trophies of affections hot,
 Of pensived and subdued desires the tender,
 Nature hath charged me that I hoard them not, 220
 But yield them up where I myself must render,
 That is, to you, my origin and ender:
 For these of force must your oblations be;
 Since I their altar, you empatron me.

with other things, be they never so greene, it surpasseth them all in pleasant verdure . . . Nay, if the sight hath bene wearied and dimmed by intensive poring upon any thing else, the beholding of this stone doth refresh and restore it againe, which lapidaries well know, that cut and engrave fine stones; for they have not a better means to refresh their eyes than the Emeraud, the mild greene that it hath doth so comfort and revive their wearines and lassitude’.

215–16 The . . . manifold Perhaps in contrast to the single powerful properties attributed to the diamond and the emerald, the sapphire and opal are linked with many other elements – objects manifold – to yield a variety of symbolism.

217 The deep-brained sonnets accompanying them, skilfully enumerating the jewels’ attributes, caused them either to smile (attractively) or complain (imploringly).

219 pensived probably, rendered pensive or sad, saddened (OED, this example only) tender offering, token; cf. 83.4, ‘The barren tender of a poet’s debt’.

220–1 Strongly echoes sonnet 1, with its account of the addressee as niggarding, as well as 126, with its anticipation of the time when nature must render the youth up to death; but what is disconcertingly different here is that instead of making a gift of his inherent gifts – youth, beauty, rank – the speaker is applying the argument against niggarding to gifts bestowed on him by others.

222 origin and ender takes the deification of the mistress to the unusual extreme of identifying her with God himself, as ‘Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending’ (Revelation, 1.8)

223 oblations offerings: another word with strong biblical associations; cf. Leviticus, 7.38.

224 Since I since I am empatron patronize; stand in the relation of patron to (OED, this example only): the somewhat strained argument seems to be that the maid is to the young man as an altar, or subject of devotion, equivalent to what he is for all the other women, so the love-gifts previously offered to him are now all due to her.

215 heaven-hued] Ard'; heauen hewd Q sapphire] Saphir opal] Opall 217 well-blazoned smiled] well blazond smil'd 219 pensived] Oxf; pensiu'd subdued] subdew'd 220 charged] chargd 224 altar] Aulter empatron] enpatrone

- "O then advance of yours that phraseless hand, 225
 Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
 Take all these similes to your own command,
 Hallowed with sighs that burning lungs did raise:
 What me, your minister for you, obeys,
 Works under you; and to your audit comes 230
 Their distract parcels in combined sums.
- "Lo, this device was sent me from a nun,
 Or sister sanctified, of holiest note,
 Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
 Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote; 235
 For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
 But kept cold distance, and did thence remove
 To spend her living in eternal love.

- 225 phraseless beyond description; cf. termless, l. 94.
- 226 an elaborate way of saying that her hand's whiteness is beyond praise: with his words on one side of the balance, and its whiteness on the other, the words will fly up as inadequately lightweight.
- 227 these similes the similes used to and about the young man by his previous mistresses in their love-gifts and sonnets
- 228 Hallowed another word with strong religious associations (cf. l. 222 and n.), as in 'hallowed be thy name' in the Lord's Prayer (BCP)
- 229–30 What . . . you another contorted argument (cf. 187–9 and n.): presumably, 'Since I act as a mediator on your behalf, that which is subject to my control, or under obedience to you, is now under yours.'
- 230–1 to . . . sums The separate portions (parcels) of love offered to the young man are now transferred collectively to your own reckoning of accounts; the literal sense of audit as 'hearing' may have some bearing here.
- 231 combined combined
- 232–3 nun . . . sanctified The rhetorical correction of nun to sister sanctified suggests that the woman described (in this post-Reformation poem) may be not technically a member of a religious order, merely a woman who has made a nun-like decision to devote herself to chastity.
- 234 noble suit amorous address made to her by a nobleman, or noblemen
- 235 havings possessions; behaviour (OED 2, 3) blossoms perhaps suggests the 'flower' of young men at court; cf. also Venus' address to Adonis as 'the field's chief flower', VA 8.
- 236 richest coat most splendid coat of arms (cf. OED coat 4, with this example), therefore of the most ancient nobility
- 238 living the rest of her life eternal love love of God, as distinct from the transitory love between human beings: cf. Sidney, CS, 32, which begins 'Leave me, O Love, which reachest but to dust', and ends 'Eternall Love maintaine thy life in me'.

"But O, my sweet, what labour is't to leave
 The thing we have not, mast'ring what not strives, 240
 Planing the place which did no form receive,
 Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves;
 She that her fame so to herself contrives
 The scars of battle 'scapeth by the flight,
 And makes her absence valiant, not her might. 245

"O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
 The accident which brought me to her eye
 Upon the moment did her force subdue,
 And now she would the caged cloister fly,
 Religious love put out religion's eye; 250
 Not to be tempted would she be immured,
 And now to tempt all liberty procured.

239–40 what . . . not How difficult it is to relinquish (desire for) the thing we do not have: presumably this applies to the sister sanctified, who finds it hard to sustain her negative vow to forswear earthly love.

what not strives that which does not resist

241 Planing Capell's emendation of Q's 'Playing' has been adopted, on the presumption that the copy MS read 'Playning' or 'Plaỹing'. The suggestion presumably is that a surface already smooth, or paper empty of signs, is pointlessly 'planed', or smoothed over (cf. OED plane v. 1a, b, c): the sister, already chaste, seeks to reinforce her chastity further.

242 playing at being patient in fetters voluntarily adopted, not enforced by others

243–5 A reputation for chastity based on the avoidance of temptation is negative, not positive: images perhaps picked up by Milton in 'I cannot praise a fugitive and cloister'd vertue, unexercis'd & unbreath'd, that never sallies out and sees her adversary' (Areopagitica, in Milton, Prose Works, 2.515).

246 my boast the boast I am about to make

247 accident chance

248 subdue brought it into (emotional) subjection: see OED 2a, and cf. the association of the word with erotic enchantment in Oth 1.3.112, 2.3.331, 3.4.57.

249 caged caged

250 'Quasi-religious erotic devotion quenched her (previous) spiritual vision.'

251 would she be she wished to be

252 to . . . procured obtained full freedom in order to tempt (me)

241 Planing] Capell; Playing Q place] Place 242 unconstrained] vnconstrained 251 immured] Oxf; enur'd 252 procured] procure

"How mighty then you are, O hear me tell!
 The broken bosoms that to me belong
 Have emptied all their fountains in my well, 255
 And mine I pour your ocean all among:
 I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
 Must for your victory us all congeest,
 As compound love, to physic your cold breast.

"My parts had power to charm a sacred nun, 260
 Who, disciplined, I dieted in grace,
 Believed her eyes, when they t'assail begun,
 All vows and consecrations giving place.
 O most potential love! Vow, bond, nor space,
 In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine, 265
 For thou art all and all things else are thine.

"When thou impresses, what are precepts worth
 Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,

255 fountains For the association of 'fountains' with female genitalia, cf. VA 234, and Nashe's 'The Choise of Valentines', 112 (Nashe, 3.408).

256 mine my (sexual) gifts donated by the other women

258 congeest gather together, collect as a mass (OED 1): the maid is to win the collective amorous submissions of his previous mistresses to the young man, as well as those of the young man himself.

259 plays on the sense of compound as a compounded drug, medicine (OED 2a; and cf. Luc 531, Cym 1.1.58), which will heal, or mollify, the maid's amorous coldness 260 parts talents, attractions; cf. 17.4 and n.

261 continues medical metaphor: though the nun had disciplined herself to remain chaste, the young man dieted her, or 'regulated her food for the benefit of her health' (OED diet 2a), by offering a favourable response to her love.

263 giving place yielding, giving ground to (OED give 47a, d)

264 potential powerful, commanding (OED 1); cf. Oth 1.2.13.

264–5 Vow . . . confine a slightly clumsy use of correlatio, in which the three components vow, bond, space are defined as correspondingly transcending the restrictions of sting, knot or confine (here a noun = limit or boundary: cf. KL 2.4.150): the whole is an elaborate way of saying that 'Love overcomes all' (Tilley, L527). 'Sting' does not apply well to 'vow', however; conceivably the word here should be 'strength' (RP).

267 impresses enforce, urge; imprint idea (of love) on the mind (OED impress v. 3)

256 ocean] Ocean 260 nun] Capell; Sunne Q 261 Who, disciplined,] Who disciplin'd
 262 Believed] Beleu'd

How coldly those impediments stand forth,
 Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame? 270
 Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense, 'gainst shame,
 And sweetens in the suff'ring pangs it bears
 The aloes of all forces, shocks and fears.

“Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
 Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine, 275
 And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
 To leave the batt'ry that you make 'gainst mine,
 Lending soft audience to my sweet design
 And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
 That shall prefer and undertake my troth.” 280

‘This said, his wat'ry eyes he did dismount,
 Whose sights till then were levelled on my face;
 Each cheek a river running from a fount

269 impediments Cf. 116.2.

271 Love's . . . peace Love's weapons are, paradoxically, those of peace: implies that love achieves instant conquest and consent.

271–3 rule . . . fears Though again deploying threefold elements (cf. 264–5 and n.), this time there is no correspondence between the two groups of three nouns: they simply produce an effect of rhetorical battery, corresponding with the military allusions in the image of love's powerful conquest.

273 aloes literally, a purgative drug with a bitter taste, ‘procured from the inspissated juice of plants of the genus Aloe’; figuratively, bitter experiences, trials (OED 3, 4)

277 leave desist from batt'ry bombardment or succession of blows to a besieged fortress (OED 3a): the young man's suggestion that the maid is besieging him, instead of his besieging her (as in 176–8), is particularly neat.

278 audience (favourable) hearing, attention (OED 1)

279 credent trustful, credulous (OED 1); cf. Ham 1.3.30.

280 prefer and undertake assist and act as surety for (OED prefer 2; undertake 4g, with this example)

troth truth, or promise of faithfulness: a word strongly associated with the promise made in the marriage service, ‘And thereto I plight thee my troth’ (BCP, 292).

281 dismount Like the maid's eyes in ll. 22–5, the young man's eyes are seen as guns mounted on a gun carriage, which are now lowered (cf. OED dismount 6, 8).

282 levelled on aimed at; cf. her levelled eyes, l. 22.

273 aloes] Alloes 279 strong-bonded] strong bonded 282 levelled] leaueld

With brinish current downward flowed apace.
 O how the channel to the stream gave grace, 285
 Who glazed with crystal gate the glowing roses
 That flame through water which their hue encloses!

'O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
 In the small orb of one particular tear!
 But with the inundation of the eyes 290
 What rocky heart to water will not wear?
 What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
 O cleft effect! Cold modesty, hot wrath,
 Both fire from hence and chill extincture hath.

'For lo, his passion, but an art of craft, 295
 Even there resolved my reason into tears;
 There my white stole of chastity I daffed,
 Shook off my sober guards and civil fears,
 Appeared to him as he to me appears,

285-7 a mannered conceit of the youth's tears as 'glazing', or glassing over, forming a crystal gate over, the roses of his cheeks, seen also as a flame shining through water

290-1 But . . . wear? The reasoning is that if even one tear is irresistibly powerful, containing a hell of witchcraft (cf. the erotic witchcraft of Katherine's lips, H5 5.2.301), no heart can fail to be melted by an inundation of tears.

292 warmed warmèd

293-4 Developing the oxymoronic conceit of flame through water from l. 287, the maid now expounds the cleft, or divided, effect of the young man's tears: from the same source (hence), her modesty receives fire, and her hot wrath – presumably anger with the youth for his persistence – is coldly extinguished. Extincture, for 'extinction', is yet another nonce word, and perhaps carries with it a sense of 'tincture' in the sense of 'stain' or 'taint' (OED 3a, 5a), anticipating the 'poisoning' of l. 301.

295 art of craft (the product of) an art of crafty deception

296 resolved dissolved; transformed; cf. Ham 1.2.130; Tim 4.3.442.

297 white . . . chastity The image suggests an imaginative conflation of the maid with the nun of 232ff.

daffed took off, disrobed myself of; cf. AC 4.4:13.

298 sober guards suggests both metaphorical guards, and sober clothes which had appeared to protect her

284 downward| downe-ward 286 glazed| glaz'd crystal| Christall roses| Roses 288 witchcraft| witch-craft 293 O| Malone; Or Q 296 resolved| resolu'd 297 daffed| Oxf; daft Q 299 Appeared| this edn.; Appaere Q

All melting, though our drops this diff'rence bore: 300
His poisoned me, and mine did him restore.

'In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves 305
In either's, aptness, as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows.

'That not a heart which in his level came
Could 'scape the hail of his all-hurting aim, 310
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And veiled in them, did win whom he would maim.
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;
When he most burned in heart-wished luxury
He preached pure maid, and praised cold chastity. 315

300 melting primarily, 'dissolving with tears'; but the word also has strong erotic associations, as in Song 10 of Sidney's AS: 'My life melts with too much thinking', where 'melt' suggests 'experience orgasm'; cf. also Partridge, 153.

301 poisoned If the sexual application of melting, in the preceding line, is pursued, there is a suggestion of venereal infection as well as moral corruption.

302 subtle matter delicate, malleable, deceptive material (that of the human body)

303 cautels wiles, deceptions; cf. Ham 1.3.15.

306 either's, aptness in either of these moods, (he assumes and provokes) an appropriate measure (of emotion): the young man sounds like both the ideally responsive auditor, and a consummately versatile actor, whose body, like that of the First Player in Ham 2.2., can generate tears and physical manifestations of passion at command.

309 level range (of his aim), reverting to the military imagery of 281-2

312 veiled in them presumably, in a fair appearance of natural kindness and gentleness

314 heart-wished luxury lechery which he desired in his heart

315 preached pure maid preached as if he were a pure maid; preached a doctrine of maidenliness

300 diff'rence] difference 301 poisoned] poison'd 303 cautels] Cautills 305 swooning] Malone: sounding Q; swoounding Capell 306 either's, aptness,] eithers aptnesse 308 swoon] Malone: sound Q 310 all-hurting] Malone: all hurting Q 311 nature] Nature 312 veiled] void 314 burned] burnt heart-wished] hart-wisht 315 preached] preacht praised] praised

'Thus, merely with the garment of a grace,
 The naked and concealed fiend he covered,
 That th'unexperient gave the tempter place
 Which, like a cherubin, above them hovered.
 Who, young and simple, would not be so loved? 320
 Ay me, I fell, and yet do question make
 What I should do again for such a sake.

'O, that infected moisture of his eye!
 O, that false fire which in his cheek so glowed!
 O, that forced thunder from his heart did fly! 325
 O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestowed!
 O, all that borrowed motion, seeming owed,
 Would yet again betray the fore-betrayed,
 And new pervert a reconciled maid.'

316 garment of a grace outward appearance of an angel

317 concealed concealed

318 unexperient person(s) without experience: nonce word

318–19 tempter . . . cherubin The Devil (often referred to in Tyndale's Bible as 'the tempter') is imagined as hovering over the pair, disguised as a cherubin (the normal Elizabethan word for 'cherub').

320 loved provided with a lover: nonce word. This line makes explicit the gradually implied reversal of the meaning of the title, from 'complaint by a lover' to 'complaint about a lover'.

323–9 What initially seems to be a succession of disjointed exclamations turns out to assemble, rather as the love-gifts to the young man were assembled, a collective rhetoric which betrays the maid even as she reinvokes it in her attempt at selfpurgation.

326 spongy soft, absorbent: presumably here suggesting a treacherous capacity to generate false breath, or words; cf. Fulke Greville, Alaham (1633), II.iii, 'The spongie hearts of men / Their hollowes gladly fill with women's love'; and Ham 4.2.12–14.

327 seeming apparently owed possessed, inherent

329 pervert . . . maid Following the tempter/cherubin images in the preceding stanza, this suggests that the maid, transiently repentant, or reconciled to God, is ready to be once again 'perverted' by the recollection of his false body-language.

reconciled reconciled: for the religious and ecclesiastical application of the word, especially with reference to the Church of Rome, cf. OED reconcile 5a, b; 2.

317 covered] couerd 319 cherubin] Cherubin hovered] houerd 320 loved] louerd 324 glowed] glowd 325 forced] forc'd 329 maid] Maide.

APPENDIX

MANUSCRIPT TEXTS

The history of the manuscript transmission of individual sonnets belongs, almost certainly, with 'Reception', not 'Text'. That is, it tells us something about which sonnets were most admired by collectors of verse, but provides no textual evidence independent of Q. None of the twenty-five extant texts¹ antedates 1609, and there is no good reason to believe that any of them derives, directly or indirectly, from independent authorial versions, such as those 'sugred sonnets' to which Francis Meres referred in 1598 (see Introduction, p. 1). Gary Taylor has defended the 'authenticity' of some of the variant readings in the eleven manuscript versions of sonnet 2 ('When forty winters . . .'), claiming that these are 'characteristic both of Shakespeare's early style and of the themes and imagery of the relevant sonnets themselves'². It is odd, if so, that the wide circulation of this sonnet occurred only in the 1620s and 1630s, more than a decade after the appearance of Q, and that it is found largely in the company of late Jacobean and Caroline verse, not with other pre-1609 poems. Indeed, in its context in the miscellanies, alongside poems by Carew, Strode, Corbett and Herrick, Shakespeare's speaker's plea for fruition and procreation – implicitly, and sometimes explicitly, addressed to a young girl – comes across as in effect an honorary 'Cavalier' seduction lyric. Given Shakespeare's commanding reputation, and the uninvited publicity given to his non-dramatic verse by Meres and William Jaggard, there must have been many collectors of lyric poetry before 1609 who would have loved to get hold of individual sonnets. Yet no pre-1609 manuscript

1 For a full list, see Beal, 2.449–63. Beal's system of reference, ShW + number, is used.

2 TxC, 444.

texts survive, nor do any literary manuscripts by Shakespeare, and it is rather hard to imagine from what source, other than Q, the seventeenth-century texts could derive.

Taylor gave especial praise to the version of 2 in ShW18, George Morley's commonplace book.¹ He suggested that it might be relatively early, though it is not clear whether he inspected the manuscript personally.² Not only does this item appear soon after Morley's own poem 'On the death of King James' – whose subject-matter places it in 1625 or later – it seems to have been added to the commonplace book some time later than the material surrounding it. The much more open, sprawling version of Morley's hand in which the sonnet is written suggests that it may have been a matter of many years later. On folios 48^v-49^r a batch of five poems, including the elegy on King James, has been written in a neat and careful hand, the last of them a horribly misogynistic epigram 'On an olde woeman'. The much-circulated version of sonnet 2, under the title 'To one that would dye a maid', which occurs also in three other manuscripts (ShW12, ShW13, ShW19), occupies a space on the lower part of folio 49^r, and presents every appearance of late addition. We may speculate about whether Morley inserted Shakespeare's sonnet (here unattributed) at this point merely because the half-page left blank was the right size for a sonnet, or because he felt that there was a thematic connection between the 'toothless Scilla' of the epigram and the addressee of sonnet 2, here to be presumed female, whose 'hollow suncken eyes' are foreseen. The poem immediately following, from folio 49^v onwards, the much-circulated 'The parliament fart', also looks as if it was transcribed by Morley at an earlier date than sonnet 2. Though the embarrassingly public emission celebrated in John Hoskyns's poem originally occurred in 1607, the poem's widest circulation, in a much adapted and expanded version, as here, occurred after 1 Westminster Abbey MS 41, fol. 49^r.

2 Taylor, 'Some MSS', 220.

1628.¹ The suggestion transmitted by both Taylor and Kerrigan that the version of 2 in ShW18 could be as early as 1619² is most unlikely to be correct. George Morley's commonplace book takes its place alongside the ten other manuscripts in which a text of 2 appears as an interesting and varied miscellany of the Caroline period, with no special or independent links with pre-1609 sources.

Taylor has also made much of the 'Shakespearian' deftness of the title 'Spes Altera', which is applied to sonnet 2 in four manuscripts (ShW8, ShW9, ShW10, ShW14).³ He traces it to its source in Virgil's Aeneid, 12.168, where it refers to Aeneas' son Ascanius, 'second hope of great Rome'. Yet the deployment of a Latin title seems most uncharacteristic of Shakespeare, and much more typical of the university and Inns of Court environment to which so many of the Jacobean and Caroline miscellanies belong.⁴ Also, by labelling the seventeenth-century collectors of 2 'copyists' Taylor suggests that they were unthinking and unlearned scribes, who might accidentally and unconsciously transmit an early variant version of a Shakespeare sonnet derived from a text produced several decades before. Yet many of the compilers of these miscellanies can be identified as individuals who had enjoyed considerably more formal education and social advantages than Shakespeare had done. George Morley, for instance, was educated at Westminster and Christ Church, and was to end his life as Bishop of Winchester. Horatio Carey, shown by Taylor to be the compiler of ShW26,⁵ was a great-grandson of Shakespeare's patron the first Lord Hunsdon. Margaret Bellasys, owner of the manuscript containing ShW8,⁶ seems to have been the daughter of Thomas Bellasys (1577-1653), who was created Baron Fauconberg by Charles I

1 Whitlock, 283-95.

2 Kerrigan, 441.

3 Taylor, 'Some MSS', 233-6.

4 For a general survey of these, see Marotti, 31-7.

5 Rosenbach MS 1083/17, fols 132'-133.

6 BL MS 10309, fol. 143.

in 1627. Collectors of poems in this period frequently introduced readings which could in some sense be called improvements, and may have taken a pride in doing so. The variant readings in the manuscript versions of sonnet 2 which Taylor has defended as 'Shakespearian' were more probably arrived at through such a process of later intervention. Though Taylor claims that 'the transcriber of a sonnet in the 1620s should not have introduced a tissue of reminiscences of poems and plays which Shakespeare wrote three decades earlier'¹, the significant point here is not so much the date when the poems and plays were written as the time when they became generally accessible. After the appearance of the First Folio in 1623 bookish men and women, such as were the compilers of the Caroline manuscript miscellanies, were likely to have studied Shakespeare's work in some detail.

I am not myself convinced that any of the variants in the manuscript versions of sonnet 2 seem particularly 'Shakespearian'; but if they were, a response to Shakespeare's published works would be the likeliest explanation. To the present editor, however, this version appears dilute and conventional, lacking many of the rich complexities of the Q text. For instance, in Q, lines 1-2 sustain a consistent military metaphor, in which 'forty winters' will 'besiege' the young man's beauty – synecdochically represented by his 'brow' – by digging 'deep trenches' in it. The manuscript versions' 'trench deep furrows', for Q's 'digge deep trenches', substitutes a clod-hopping metaphor of ploughing furrows in a field. Not only does this deviate from the image of siege warfare; it introduces associations with seed-sowing and eventual harvest which are wholly inappropriate, since the dynamic of the sonnet depends upon an absolute contrast between the invasive threat posed to the youth's beauty by 'forty winters' if he fails to marry, and the fruitful alternative if he does. Likewise, in line 6, the substitution for Q's

1 Taylor 'Some MSS', 236.

Where all the treasure of thy lusty daies of

Where all the lustre of thy youthful days

is weak and shallow. The Q version alludes specifically to the young man's reproductive capacity, with his semen ('treasure') diminishing unused if he lets his 'lusty' – sexually vigorous – time go by. The manuscript version – implicitly, and in some texts explicitly, addressed to a woman – makes only a superficial and bowdlerized allusion to the loss of beauty, 'lustre' looking suspiciously like a memorial conflation of 'lusty' and 'treasure' by someone who had tried to learn the poem by heart, or was copying inattentively. A text of the manuscript version of sonnet 2 is included here so that readers can judge for themselves.

Eleven further sonnets, or part-sonnets, are found in manuscript versions. Some, like ShW6, ShW22 and ShW27, are extremely late – circa 1660 – and self-evidently derivative.¹ Only one sonnet, 106 ('When in the chronicle of wasted time'), achieves repeat circulation, in ShW25 and ShW26. Both manuscripts belong to 1630 or later, and the latter heterosexualizes the sonnet by adding the title 'On his Mistris Beauty'. ShW 20² has a text of sonnet 8 which resembles the 'Spes Altera' versions of 2 in having a Latin title added, 'In laudem Musice et opprobrium Contemptorii eiusdem' ('In praise of music, and in contempt of its despiser'). The title gives the sonnet the air of belonging to an academic debate, as do some other poems in this manuscript, such as the pair of poems with which it opens, the first claiming that love is water, the second that it is fire. The text of sonnet 8 is on the same leaf as two epitaphs on Prince Henry (1612), but other nearby material, such as R. Moore's translation of Musaeus (folios 16^v-22^v), dated 11 November 1630, suggests a much later date. The variants in 8 may reflect some concern to make the musical metaphors technically more correct, at the price of making them poetically less expressive, as in the reading at line 8, 'a parte, which thou shouldst bere', for Q's 'the parts that thou should'st bear'. Though a single musician may indeed perform only one 'part', the manuscript version eliminates Q's allusion to the young man's 'parts' in the sense of 'talents, attainments', as in 17.4, 37.7, 69.1 and LC 260. But because of its unique status a transcript is included below.

1 All in Folger MS V.a.148, Part 1, fols 22–7.

2 BL MS Add. 15226, fol. 4^v.

14 a Early transcription of sonnet 128. From Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 152, fol. 34'

Two further texts which merit discussion – and are included here – also have a musical dimension. ShW28¹ presents a version

1 New York Public Library, Drexel MS 4257, no. 33; reproduced in Cam³, 27.

Henry Lawes that John Donne the younger acquired many of the texts of Pembroke's poems that he published in 1660.¹ The Shakespeare–Pembroke–Lawes connection might well reward further investigation. The song also forges a link with Milton, for whose Arcades and Comus Lawes composed music. However, it is not significant textually. Though Blakemore Evans called it 'near-contemporary', this adaptation and setting probably belong to the 1630s, Lawes's most active period as a song-composer.¹

ShW29² offers a text of sonnet 128 ('How oft when thou my musike musike playst'), one of only two 'dark lady' sonnets to achieve representation in manuscript. Like sonnet 8, it has a musical theme, and it may have been transcribed by someone who recognized Shakespeare's use of the word 'jacks' in lines 5 and 13 as technically incorrect – while failing to see its richness in innuendo – and for that reason altered it to 'kies' (keys). The substitution of 'tuched' for 'tikled' in line 9 may also reflect some concern with musical exactitude. This, rather than ShW18, is probably the earliest surviving transcription of any of Shakespeare's sonnets. It appears as the second poem of four,³ all crowded rather inelegantly on to a single small leaf of paper (15 × 15 cm.), and written in an unlearned-seeming hand apt to use phonetic spellings (Figures 14 a and b). It is unlikely to derive from an independent manuscript text, for all three of the accompanying poems (two of them not previously identified) appear to be drawn from printed sources. The first item is the opening stanza of Song XII from John Dowland's First Booke of Songes or Ayres, printed in 1597 and again in 1600, 1606 and 1613. Following the version of 128 comes William Browne's poem 'Love's Labyrinth', which appeared in the first book of Britannia's Pastorals (1613), 61. Though this poem achieved

1 Cam³, 289; cf. Evans, 'Lawes'; also the entry on Lawes in New Grove Dictionary of Music.

2 Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 152, fol. 34^r.

3 Perhaps misled by a line drawn across the page in the Dowland stanza, Robbins claimed that there are 'five pieces of verse'.

some manuscript circulation elsewhere,¹ the source is most probably the printed text. Likewise, the fourth and final poem, 'I bend my wits and beate my werye breene', derives from a printed source, being Francis Davison's Sonnet II in Davison's A Poetical Rhapsody, published in 1602, 1608 and 1611. It seems, then, that this writer was collecting love lyrics from printed sources, and transcribing them, rather inaccurately, some time in or after 1613. Some readings are nonsensical, such as 'of loues despight' for 'of my delight' in line 3 of the Dowland poem. Others are clumsy or careless, such as the non-rhyming 'reped' for 'reape' in 128.7, or 'to imprinsen' for 'T'imprison' in the Davison sonnet. One reading points to a faithful but unintelligent response to the printed original, suggesting that these texts derive directly, and not through a manuscript intermediary, from their printed sources. William Browne's 'Love's Labyrinth' is presented emblematically in the printed text as an inscription on a continuous interlaced ribbon, with shading to indicate depth at points where the ribbon crosses over. The nonsensical manuscript reading 'in a rounde shuts up all quaringe' reflects its writer's failure to notice a partly shaded initial 's', the correct word being, of course, 'squaring'. In the light of this contextual evidence, Taylor's suggestion that ShW29 'may represent an earlier draft of the poem'² can be rejected, as can his and Beal's proposed dating, circa 1625-40s. A more plausible date would be 1613-20.

What is remarkable about this manuscript is not its status as an independent witness to the text of a Shakespeare sonnet – it is simplified and inaccurate – but its testimony to some interest in and appreciation of Shakespeare's Sonnets in the years immediately after 1609. While the location of sonnet 2 among lyrics by Carew, Suckling and Herrick, combined, usually, with the omission of Shakespeare's name, gives the manuscript version of

1 Cf. Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 160, fol. 102'.

2 TxC, 446.

‘When forty winters . . . ’ an anachronistically ‘Cavalier’ status, this manuscript, much more aptly, associates ‘How oft when thou my musike . . . ’ with songs, sonnets and pattern poems of the period 1597–1613. It may even have been transcribed during Shakespeare’s lifetime, with the three accompanying poems offering some reflection of the cultural context in which Shakespeare’s Sonnets was first read. For an uninformed reader of The Passionate Pilgrim Shakespeare had been associated with Dowland in the sonnet attributed to him, though actually by Barnfield, ‘If music and sweet poetry agree’, which includes the lines

Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense . . .

In all of its editions, Dowland’s First Booke of Songs was dedicated to Sir George Carey, Lord Hunsdon, who succeeded his father as Lord Chamberlain, and therefore as patron of Shakespeare’s company, in March 1597. The conjunction of Shakespeare’s sonnet with one by Francis Davison is also thought-provoking, in the light of Davison’s dedication of A Poetical Rhapsody to William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke (see Introduction, p. 64). William Browne, too, was to be closely associated with the Herbert family, dedicating the two-book version of Britannia’s Pastorals to Pembroke in 1616. None of the other manuscripts seems to be so early or to shed so much light on the early reception of Shakespeare’s Sonnets. For this reason, despite its clumsiness, the manuscript is reproduced in full (Figs 14 a and b).

In the following transcripts, contractions have been expanded, and the expanded portions italicized; the style and spacing of stanza numbers have been regularized.

[2]

Spes Altera

When thre score winters shall beseige thy brow
 And trench deepe furrowes in that louely feild
 Thy youths faire Liu'rie soe accounted now
 Shall be like rotten weeds, of no worth held.
 Then being ask'd where all thy beautie lies 5
 Where's all that Lustre of thy youthfull dayes
 To saye within these hollow-suncken eies,
 Were an all-eaten truth, & worthlesse praise.
 O how much better were thy beauties vse
 If thou couldst say, this pretty childe of mine 10
 Saues my account, & makes my old excuse
 Making his beautie by succession thine.
 This were to be new borne, when thou art old
 And see thy bloode warme, when thou feelst it cold.

From BL MS Add. 10309, fol. 143^r (Margaret Bellasys's commonplace book, c. 1630).

1 thre score] fortie Q 2 trench deepe furrowes] digge deep trenches Q 3 faire] proud
Q accounted] gaz'd on Q 4 Shall] Wil Q like rotten weeds,] a totter'd weed Q no] small Q 6 Where's] Where Q that] the Q Lustre] treasure Q youthfull] lusty Q
 7 these hollow-suncken] thine owne deepe sunken Q 8 all-eaten truth] all-eating shame
Q worthlesse] thriftlesse Q 9 O how much better were] How much more praise deseru'd
Q 10 say] answe're Q pretty] faire Q 11 Saues my account] Shall sum my count Q makes] make Q 12 Making] Proouing Q 13 borne] made Q

[8]

In laudem Musice et opprobrium Contemptorii eiusdem

1

Musicke to heare, why hearest thou Musicke sadly
 Sweete with sweetes warre not, Joy delightes in Joy
 Why louest thou that which thou receauest not gladly or else receauest with pleasure thine annoy

2

If the true Concord of well tuned Soundes 5
 By Vnions maried doe offend thy eare
 They doe but sweetlie chide thee, whoe confoundes
 In singlenes a parte, which thou shouldst beare

3

Marke howe one stringe, sweet husband to another 10
 Strikes each on each, by mutuall orderinge
 Resemblinge Childe, & Syer, and happy Mother
Which all in one, this single note doth singe whose speechlesse songe beeing many seeming one Singes this to thee, Thou single, shalt proue none

W. Shakspeare.

From BL MS Add. 15226, fol. 4^v (c. 1630–50).

1 hearest] hear'st Q 2 Sweete] Sweets Q 3 louest] lou'st Q 4 receauest] reaceau'st Q
 6 thy] thine Q 8 a parte] the parts Q which] that Q 10 on] in Q 11 Childe, & Syer] sier, and child Q 12 Which] Who Q this single] one pleasing Q doth] do Q 14 shalt] wilt Q

[Adapted and expanded version of 116]

Selfe blinding error seazeth all those mindes;
who with falce Appellations call that loue which alters when it alteration findes or with the mouer hath a power to moue not much unlike the heretickes pretence 5 that scites trew scriptures but preuentes ther sence:
Henry Lawes

2

Oh no Loue is an euer fixed marke
That lookes on tempestes but is neuer shaken
It is the starr to euery wandring barke
Whose worth's unknowne although his height be taken 10
Noe mowntebanke with eie-deludeing flashes
But flameing Martyr in his holly ashes

3

Loue's not tymes foole though Rosie lippes & Cheekes
Within his bynding Circle compas rownd
Loue alters not with his briefe howers & weekes 15
But holdes it out euen to the edge of doome
If this be error & not truth approu'd
Cupids noe god nor Man nere lou'd

From MS Drexel 4257, No. 33 (New York Public Library, Music Division)
(c. 1630–50).

Lines 3-4, 7-10, 13-14, correspond to lines 3-4, 5-8, 9-14 of Q.

how ouft when thou, deere deerest musick plaiest, vpon that blessed wood whose mocions sounds,
 with thy sweet fingers when thou gen\ t/ly swaies,
 the wiry concord that myne eare consoun\ d/es,
 o how I enuy those kies that nimble leapes, 5 to kisse the tender inward of thy hand, whilst my poore lippes wich should that haruest reped,
 at the wood bouldnes by thee blushing stand,
 to bee so tuched the faine would change there state,
 and situacion with those dancinge chippes, 10
 ouer whome youre fingers walke with gentle gate, making deed wood more blest then liuing lipes,
 Since then those keyes soe happy are in this,
 giue them youre fingers mee youre lipes to kisse.

From Bodleian MS Rawl. poet 152, fol. 34'. (A single leaf, c. 1613-20.)

1 deere deerest] my musike Q 2 mocions] motion Q 3 swaies] swayst Q 4 consoun\ d/es] confounds Q 5 o how] Do Q kies] Iackes Q leapes] leape Q 7 reped] reape Q 8 wood] woods Q 9 tuched] tikled Q the faine] they Q 11 ouer] Ore Q youre] their Q 13 then those keyes] sausie Iackes Q 14 youre fingers] their fingers Q youre lipes] thy lips Q

ABBREVIATIONS AND REFERENCES

Unless otherwise specified, the edition of Shakespeare used for references and quotations from works other than Sonnets is Arden 2. The Bible used for scriptural references and quotations is A.W.Pollard's edition (Oxford, 1911) of the Authorized Version. All quotations and translations from classical authors are taken from the Loeb Classical Library, unless another source is indicated. In all references, the place of publication is London unless otherwise stated.

ABBREVIATIONS

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THE NOTES

*	precedes commentary notes involving readings altered from the early edition on which this edition is based this edn	a reading adopted for the first time in this edition

WORKS BY AND PARTLY BY SHAKESPEARE

AC	Antony and Cleopatra
AW	All's Well That Ends Well
AYL	As You Like It
CE	The Comedy of Errors
Cor	Coriolanus
Cym	Cymbeline
Ham	Hamlet
1H4	Henry IV, Part 1
2H4	Henry IV, Part 2
H5	Henry V
1H6	Henry VI, Part 1
2H6	Henry VI, Part 2
3H6	Henry VI, Part 3
H8	Henry VIII
JC	Julius Caesar
KJ	King John

Abbreviations

KL	King Lear
LC	A Lover's Complaint
LLL	Love's Labour's Lost
Luc	The Rape of Lucrece
MA	Much Ado About Nothing
Mac	Macbeth
MM	Measure for Measure
MND	A Midsummer Night's Dream
MV	The Merchant of Venice
MW	The Merry Wives of Windsor
Oth	Othello
Per	Pericles
PP	The Passionate Pilgrim
PT	The Phoenix and the Turtle
R2	Richard II
R3	Richard III
RJ	Romeo and Juliet
Son	Shakespeare's Sonnets
TC	Troilus and Cressida
Tem	The Tempest
TGV	The Two Gentlemen of Verona
Tim	Timon of Athens
Tit	Titus Andronicus
TN	Twelfth Night
TNK	The Two Noble Kinsmen
TS	The Taming of the Shrew
VA	Venus and Adonis
WT	The Winter's Tale

REFERENCES

EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE COLLATED

- Ard¹ C.Knox Pooler, ed., The Works of Shakespeare: Sonnets, The Arden Shakespeare (1918)
- Benson Poems: Written by Wil. Shake-speare. Gent., published by John Benson (1640)
- Booth Stephen Booth, ed., Shakespeare's Sonnets (New Haven, Conn., and London 1977)
- Cam² J.Dover Wilson, ed., Sonnets (Cambridge, 1966)
- Cam³ G.Blakemore Evans, ed., The Sonnets (Cambridge, 1996)
- Capell Edward Capell, marked-up copy of Sonnets published by Bernard Lintott (1711), in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge
- IR W.G.Ingram and Theodore Redpath, eds, Shakespeare's Sonnets (1964, 1978)
- Kerrigan John Kerrigan, ed., The Sonnets and A Lover's Complaint, The New Penguin Shakespeare (Harmondsworth, 1986)
- Malone Edmond Malone, Supplement to the Edition of Shakespeare's Plays published in 1778 (1780)
- Oxf Stanley Wells & Gary Taylor, eds, Complete Works (1986)
- PP The Passionate Pilgrime. By W.Shakespeare. (1599), Huntington Library Copy, reproduced in J.M.Osborn, Louis L.Martz & Eugene M.Waith, eds, Shakespeare's Poems: A Facsimile of the Earliest Editions (New Haven and London, 1964)
- Q Shake-speare's Sonnets. Neuer before Imprinted, published by Thomas Thorpe (1609); facsimile ed. J.M.Osborn (New Haven, Conn., 1964), and also included in Booth
- Riv Works, gen. ed. G.Blakemore Evans, Riverside Shakespeare (Boston, Mass., 1974)

OTHER WORKS CITED

The list comprises edited texts and works of scholarship later than 1850. Unedited manuscripts and early printed books are not itemized here, and are referred to by their original, old-spelling titles.

- Abbott E.A.Abbott, A Shakespearian Grammar, 2nd edn (1870)
- Armada Richard Ormond et al., Armada (1988)
- Baldwin T.W.Baldwin, On the Literary Genetics of Shakespeare's Poems and Sonnets (Urbana, Ill., 1950)
- Barroll J.Leeds Barroll, Politics, Plague, and Shakespeare's Theatre (Ithaca and London, 1991)
- Barton Anne Barton, Ben Jonson, Dramatist (1984)

References

- BCP John E.Booty, ed., The Book of Common Prayer 1559: The Elizabethan Prayer Book (Charlottesville, Va., 1976)
- Beal Peter Beal, Index of Literary Manuscripts 1450-1625, 2 vols (New York, 1980)
- Bearman Robert Bearman, Shakespeare in the Stratford Records (1994)
- Bentley G.E.Bentley, The Jacobean and Caroline Stage, 7 vols (1968)
- BL MS British Library Manuscript
- Bloom Harold Bloom, ed., Critical Interpretations: Shakespeare's Sonnets (New York, 1987)
- Bradbrook M.C.Bradbrook, The School of Night (1936)
- Brennan Michael Brennan, Literary Patronage in the English Renaissance (1988)
- Brown & Feavor Ivor Brown & G.Feavor, Amazing Monument (1939)
- Burrow J.A.W.Burrow, The Ages of Man (1986)
- Cameron Alan Cameron, The Greek Anthology from Meleager to Planudes (1993)
- Castiglione Baldassare Castiglione, The Booke of the Courtier, trans. Sir Thomas Hoby (1561), The Tudor Translations, 23 (1900)
- Chambers, Shakespeare E.K.Chambers, William Shakespeare: A Study of Facts and Problems, 2 vols (Oxford, 1930)
- Chambers, Stage E.K.Chambers, The Elizabethan Stage, 4 vols (1923)
- Chaucer The Riverside Chaucer, ed. F.N.Robinson, rev. L.D.Benson (1987)
- Chedgzoy Kate Chedgzoy, Shakespeare's Queer Children: Sexual Politics and Contemporary Culture (Manchester and New York, 1995)
- Cheney C.R.Cheney, Handbook of Dates for Students of English History (1970)
- Coleridge T.M.Raysor, ed., Coleridge's Shakespearean Criticism (1930)
- Colie Rosalie Colie, Shakespeare's Living Art (1974)
- Colie, Resources Rosalie Colie, The Resources of Kind: Genre-Theory in the Renaissance (Los Angeles and London, 1973)
- CSP Calendars of State Papers
- Davies Robert Krueger, ed., Poems of Sir John Davies (1975)
- DNB Sir Leslie Stephen & Sir Sidney Lee, eds, Dictionary of National Biography (1885-1901)
- Dobson Eric Dobson, English Pronunciation 1500-1700, 2 vols (1968)
- Donne A.J.Smith, ed., The Complete English Poems of John Donne (1971)
- Drayton J.W.Hebel, Kathleen Tillotson, Bernard Newdigate et al., eds, The Works of Michael Drayton, 6 vols (1961)
- Dubrow Heather Dubrow, Captive Victors: Shakespeare's Narrative Poems and Sonnets (1987)

- Duncan-Jones, 'Canker blooms' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'Deep-dyed canker blooms: botanical reference in Sonnet 54', RES, n.s. 46:184 (1995), 521-5
- Duncan-Jones, 'Modernizing' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'Filling the unforgiving minute: modernizing SHAKE-SPEARES SONNETS (1609)', EC, 45:3 (1995), 199-207
- Duncan-Jones, 'Nashe' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'Nashe in Newgate', TLS, 22 March 1996, 15
- Duncan-Jones, 'Red and white' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'Much ado with red and white: the earliest readers of Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis (1593)', RES, n.s. 44:176 (1993), 479-501
- Duncan-Jones, Sidney Katherine Duncan-Jones, Sir Philip Sidney: Courtier Poet (1991)
- Duncan-Jones, 'Sonnets called?' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'What are Shakespeare's sonnets called?', EC, 47.1 (1997), 1-12
- Duncan-Jones, 'Sonnets unauthorized?' Katherine Duncan-Jones, 'Was the 1609 Shake-speares Sonnets really unauthorized?', RES, 34 (1983), 151-71
- Duncan-Jones, 'Syren teares' Katherine Duncan-Jones, "'Syren teares": infection or enchantment in Shakespeare's Sonnet 119', RES, ns. 48.189 (1997), 56-60
- EC* Essays in Criticism
- Edward III* C.F.Tucker Brooke, ed., in The Shakespeare Apocrypha, 1908
- E.E.D.-J Mrs. E.E.Duncan-Jones, private communication
- ELR* English Literary Renaissance
- Empson William Empson, Seven Types of Ambiguity (1935; rev. edn, 1953)
- Evans, 'Lawes' Willa McClung Evans, 'Lawes' version of Shakespeare's Sonnet CXVI', PMLA, 51 (1936), 120-2
- Everett, 'Greening' Barbara Everett, 'Shakespeare's greening', TLS, 8 July 1994, 11-13
- Everett, 'Mrs. Shakespeare' Barbara Everett, 'Mrs. Shakespeare', LRB, 8 (19 December 1986), 7-10
- Farmer Norman K.Farmer, 'Holograph revisions in two poems by Fulke Greville', ELR, 4 (1974), 98-110
- Ferry Anne Ferry, All in War with Time: Love Poetry of Shakespeare, Donne, Jonson, Marvell (1975)
- Fettiplace* Hilary Spurling, ed., Elinor Fettiplace's Receipt Book (1986)
- Foster Donald Foster, 'Master W.H., R.I.P.', PMLA, 102 (1987), 42-54
- Fowler Alastair Fowler, Triumphal Forms (1970)
- Fracastoro Geoffrey Eastough, ed., Fracastoro's 'Syphilis' (Liverpool, 1984)

- Fraunce Abraham Fraunce, The Arcadian Rhetorike (1588), ed. Ethel Seaton (1950)
- Garber Marjorie Garber, Vice Versa: Bisexuality and the Eroticism of Everyday Life (1995)
- Gascoigne J.W.Cunliffe, ed., The Works of George Gascoigne, 2 vols (1907)
- Glossary* C.T.Onions, A Shakespeare Glossary, rev. Robert D. Eagleson (Oxford, 1986)
- Graziani René Graziani, 'The numbering of Shakespeare's Sonnets 12, 60 and 126', Shakespeare Quarterly, 35 (1984), 79–82
- Gurr Andrew Gurr, 'Shakespeare's first poem: Sonnet 145', EC, 21 (1971), 221–6
- Hanks & Hodges P.Hanks & F.Hodges, A Dictionary of Surnames (1988)
- Harington N.E.McClure, ed., The Letters and Epigrams of Sir John Harington (1930)
- Harris Frank Harris, The Man Shakespeare and his Tragic Story (1909)
- Henslowe Papers* R.A.Foakes, ed., The Henslowe Papers, 2 vols (1977)
- Herbert F.E.Hutchinson, ed., The Works of George Herbert (1941)
- Heywood Thomas Heywood, Oenone and Paris (1594), ed. J.Q.Adams (1943)
- Hieatt, 'LC, Cym and Son' A.K.Hieatt, T.G.Bishop & E.A.Nicholson, "'Lover's Complaint'", Cymbeline and Sonnets, N&Q, 232 (1987), 219–24
- Hieatt, 'When?' A.K.Hieatt, Charles W.Hieatt & Anne Lake Prescott, 'When did Shakespeare write Sonnets 1609?', SP, 88:1 (Winter 1991), 69–109
- HMC Historical Manuscripts Commission, Reports on Manuscripts
- Hobbs Mary Hobbs, 'Shakespeare's Sonnet II: a "sugred sonnet"?' N&Q, 224 (1979), 112–13
- Honigmann E.A.J.Honigmann, 'There is a world elsewhere: William Shakespeare, businessman', in W.Habicht, D.J.Palmer & R.Pringle, eds, Images of Shakespeare (1988), 40–6
- Hopper Vincent F.Hopper, Medieval Number Symbolism: Its Sources, Meaning and Influence (New York, 1935; repr. 1969)
- Hotson Leslie Hotson, 'Shakespeare's Sonnets Dated' and Other Essays (1949)
- Hutton James Hutton, 'Analogues of Shakespeare's Sonnets 153–4: contributions to the history of a theme', Modern Philology, 38 (1940–1), 385–403
- Hyde, Other Love H.Montgomery Hyde, The Other Love: An Historical and Contemporary Survey of Homosexuality in Britain (1975)
- Hyde, Trials H.Montgomery Hyde, The Trials of Oscar Wilde (New York, 1962)

- Jackson, 'Complaint' MacD.P.Jackson, 'Shakespeare's A Lover's Complaint: its date and authenticity', University of Auckland Bulletin, 72, English Series, 13 (Auckland, 1965)
- Jackson, 'Compositors' MacD.P.Jackson, 'Punctuation and the compositors of Shakespeare's Sonnets (1609)', The Library, 5th series, 30 (1975), 9-10
- Jones Emrys Jones, ed., The New Oxford Book of Sixteenth Century Verse (Oxford, 1991)
- Jonson C.H.Herford & Percy Simpson, eds, Ben Jonson, 11 vols (Oxford, 1925-52)
- Kerrigan, Motives John Kerrigan, ed., Motives of Woe: Shakespeare and 'Female Complaint': A Critical Anthology (1991)
- Knight G.Wilson Knight, The Mutual Flame: On Shakespeare's Sonnets and 'The Phoenix and the Turtle' (1955)
- Lacey Robert Lacey, Robert Earl of Essex: An Elizabethan Icarus (1971)
- Lee Sidney Lee, A Life of William Shakespeare (1904)
- Leishman J.B.Leishman, Themes and Variations in Shakespeare's Sonnets (1961)
- Lennard John Lennard, 'But I Digress': The Exploitation of Parentheses in English Printed Verse (1991)
- Lindley David Lindley, The Trials of Frances Howard: Fact and Fiction at the Court of King James (1993)
- Linthicum M.Channing Linthicum, Costume in the Drama of Shakespeare and his Contemporaries (1936)
- LRB The London Review of Books
- McKerrow R.B.McKerrow, Introduction to Bibliography for Literary Students (1927)
- McPherson David McPherson, 'Ben Jonson's library and marginalia', SP, 71 (1974), 46-7
- Mahood Molly Mahood, Shakespeare's Wordplay (1957)
- Marlowe, Dr Faustus Christopher Marlowe, Doctor Faustus, ed. J.D.Jump (1962)
- Marlowe, Poems Millar MacLure, ed., Christopher Marlowe: The Poems (1988)
- Marotti Arthur F.Marotti, Manuscript, Print, and the English Renaissance (Ithaca and London, 1995)
- Martin Peter Martin, Edmond Malone, Shakespearean Scholar (1995)
- Marvell H.M.Margoliouth, P.Legouis & E.E.Duncan-Jones, eds, The Poems and Letters of Andrew Marvell (1971)
- Maxwell J.C.Maxwell, "'Rebel Powers": Shakespeare and Daniel', N&Q, 212 (1967), 139
- Milton, Poems John Carey and Alastair Fowler, eds, The Poems of John Milton (New York and London, 1968)

- Milton, Prose Works Douglas Bush et al., eds, Complete Prose Works of John Milton, 8 vols (New Haven and London, 1953–82)
- Morgan Paul Morgan, ‘“Our Will Shakespeare” and Lope de Vega: an unrecorded contemporary document’, Shakespeare Survey, 16 (1963), 118–20
- Moryson Fynes Moryson, An Itinerary (1617; Glasgow, 1907)
- Muir Kenneth Muir, Shakespeare as Collaborator (1960)
- Murray Peter B. Murray, ‘The authorship of The Revenger’s Tragedy’, Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, 56 (1962), 195–218
- N&Q* Notes and Queries
- Nashe R.B. McKerrow, ed., The Works of Thomas Nashe, 5 vols, 2nd edn, ed., F.P. Wilson (1958)
- Nosworthy J.M. Nosworthy, ‘All too short a date: internal evidence in Shakespeare’s Sonnets’, EC, 2 (1952), 311–24
- Nowottny Winifred Nowottny, The Language Poets Use (1962)
- ODQ* The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, 3rd edn (Oxford, 1979)
- OED* The Oxford English Dictionary, 2nd edn (Oxford, 1989)
- Ovid, Met. Ovid, Metamorphoses
- Partridge, Bawdy Eric Partridge, Shakespeare’s Bawdy: A Literary and Psychological Essay and a Comprehensive Glossary, rev. edn (1955)
- Partridge, Grammar A.C. Partridge, A Substantive Grammar of Shakespeare’s Nondramatic Texts (Virginia, 1976)
- Partridge, Orthography A.C. Partridge, Orthography in Shakespeare and Elizabethan Drama (1964)
- Peck D.C. Peck, ‘“News from Heaven and Hell”: a defamatory narrative of the Earl of Leicester’, ELR, 8 (1978), 141–58
- Pequigney Joseph Pequigney, Such Is My Love: A Study of Shakespeare’s Sonnets (Chicago and London, 1985)
- PMLA* Publications of the Modern Language Association of America
- Proudfoot Richard Proudfoot, ‘The Reign of King Edward the Third (1596) and Shakespeare’, Proceedings of the British Academy, 71 (1985), 159–85
- Race Sidney Race, ‘J.P. Collier and the Dulwich Papers (cxv.33)’, N&Q, 195 (1950), 112–47
- Raleigh A.M.C. Latham, ed., The Poems of Sir Walter Raleigh (1951)
- RES* Review of English Studies
- Robbins R.H. Robbins, ‘A seventeenth-century manuscript of Shakespeare’s Sonnet 128’, N&Q, 212 (1967), 137–8
- Roche T.P. Roche, Petrarch and the English Sonnet Sequences (New York, 1989)
- Rollins H.E. Rollins, ed., A New Variorum Edition of Shakespeare: The Sonnets, 2 vols (Philadelphia and London, 1944)

References

- Rowse A.L. Rowse, Shakespeare's Sonnets: the Problems Solved (1973)
- RP Richard Proudfoot, private communication
- Schaar Claes Schaar, Elizabethan Sonnet Themes and the Dating of Shakespeare's Sonnets, Lund Studies in English, 32 (1962)
- Schmidgall Gary Schmidgall, Shakespeare and the Poet's Life (Kentucky, 1990)
- Schoenbaum, Life Samuel Schoenbaum, William Shakespeare: A Documentary Life (Oxford, 1975)
- Schoenbaum, Lives Samuel Schoenbaum, Shakespeare's Lives, rev. edn (Oxford, 1991)
- Schoenbaum, Records Samuel Schoenbaum, William Shakespeare: Records and Images (Oxford, 1981)
- Sedgwick Eve Kosovsky Sedgwick, Between Men (New York, 1985)
- Sidney, AS Sir Philip Sidney, Astrophil and Stella, in W.A. Ringler ed., The Poems of Sir Philip Sidney (Oxford, 1962)
- Sidney, CS Sir Philip Sidney, Certain Sonnets, in W.A. Ringler, ed., The Poems of Sir Philip Sidney (Oxford, 1962)
- Sidney, NA V.J. Skretkovicz, ed., The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia (The New Arcadia) (Oxford, 1987)
- Sidney, OA Jean Robertson, ed., The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia (The Old Arcadia) (Oxford, 1973)
- Sidney, Poems W.A. Ringler, ed., The Poems of Sir Philip Sidney (Oxford, 1962)
- Sidney, Prose Katherine Duncan-Jones & J. van Dorsten, eds, Miscellaneous Prose of Sir Philip Sidney (Oxford, 1973)
- Robert Sidney, Poems P.J. Croft, ed., Poems of Sir Robert Sidney (1984)
- Sisson C.J. Sisson, New Readings in Shakespeare, 2 vols (1956)
- Slater Eliot Slater, 'Shakespeare: word links between poems and plays', N&Q, 220 (1975), 157-63
- SP Studies in Philology
- Spenser, FQ Edmund Spenser, The Faerie Queene, ed. A.C. Hamilton, rev. edn (1977)
- Spenser, Prose Works Rudolf Gottfried, ed., Spenser's Prose Works (Baltimore, 1949)
- Spenser, Shorter Poems W.A. Oram, ed., The Shorter Poems of Edmund Spenser (New Haven, 1989)
- STC A.W. Pollard & G.R. Redgrave, A Short-title Catalogue of Books printed in England, Scotland and Ireland 1475-1640, rev. W.A. Jackson and F.S. Ferguson, completed by Katharine F. Pantzer, 3 vols (1989-91)
- Stone Donald Stone, Ronsard's Sonnet Cycles: A Study in Tone and Vision (New Haven and London, 1966)
- Suckling, Plays L.A. Bearline, ed., The Works of Sir John Suckling: The Plays (1971)

References

- Taylor, 'Some MSS' Gary Taylor, 'Some manuscripts of Shakespeare's Sonnets', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 68 (1985-6), 210-46
- Tennyson Christopher Ricks, ed., The Poems of Tennyson, 2nd edn (Harlow, 1987)
- Tilley Morris Palmer Tilley, A Dictionary of the Proverbs in England in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (Ann Arbor, 1950)
- TLS The Times Literary Supplement
- TxC Stanley Wells & Gary Taylor, with John Jowett & William Montgomery, William Shakespeare: A Textual Companion (Oxford, 1987)
- Ungerer Gustav Ungerer, A Spaniard in Elizabethan England: The Correspondence of Antonio Perez's Exile, 2 vols (1975)
- Vendler Helen Vendler, 'Reading stage by stage: Shakespeare's Sonnets', in Russ McDonald, ed., Shakespeare Reread: The Texts in New Contexts (Ithaca and London, 1994), 23-41
- Weever John Weever, Epigrammes (1599), ed. E.A.J.Honigmann, in John Weever (1987)
- Whitlock Baird W. Whitlock, John Hoskyns, Serjeant-at-Law (Washington, 1982)
- Wilde, Letters Rupert Hart-Davis, ed., The Letters of Oscar Wilde (1962)
- Wilde, 'W.H.' Oscar Wilde, 'The Portrait of Master W.H.', Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, July 1889
- Wiles David Wiles, Shakespeare's Almanac: A Midsummer Night's Dream, Marriage and the Elizabethan Calendar (1993)
- Wilson F.P. Wilson, The Plague in Shakespeare's London (1927)
- Wyatt R.A. Rebholz, ed., Poems of Sir Thomas Wyatt (1978)

INDEX

- Abbott, E.A. 204*n*, 358*n*
 Adams, J.Q. 4, 404*n*
 Addenbrooke, John 12, 60
 Alciati, Andrea, Emblemata 439*n*
 Alden, R.M. 370*n*
 Alexander, Sir William, Aurora 29, 35, 36, 59
 Alleyn, Edward 7, 11
Amours 3-5
 Angeriano 422*n*
 Anne, Queen 67-8
 'Anomos' 65
 Apollo 146*n*
 Ariosto, Ludovico, Orlando Furioso 316*n*
 Aristotle
 Metaphysics 126*n*, 386*n*
 Rhetoric 124*n*, 144*n*
Armada (Ormond et al.) 270*n*
 Aspley, William 37
 Atkinson, Mr (apothecary) 76
 Aubrey, John 58
 Auden, W.H. 80-1
 Austen, Jane, Sense and Sensibility 78
- Bacon, Francis, Sylva Sylvarum 372*n*
 'Baker, Will' 72
 Baldwin, T.W. 19
 Baret, John, Alvearie or Quadruple Dictionarie, An 433*n*
 Barnes, Barnabe 46
 Parthenophil and Parthenope 98
 Barnfield, Richard
 Affectionate Shepherd, The 91, 364*n*, 431*n*
 Cynthia 47, 91, 374*n*
 'Ganymede' sonnets 47, 91
 'If music and sweet poetry agree' 462
 Legend of Cassandra, The 91, 431*n*
 Barroll, J. Leeds 9, 10
 Bath 422*n*
 Beal, Peter 453*n*, 461
 bear- and bull-baiting 11
 Beaumont, Francis, Woman Hater, The 5
 Beeching, H.C. 32*n*
 Beerbohm, Max 80
 cartoon of Shakespeare 81
 Bell, John, Londons Rembrancer 11*n*
 Bellasys, Margaret 455
 Bellasys, Thomas (Baron Fauconberg) 455
 Benson, John xvi, 35-6, 41-3, 45, 72, 74, 210*n*, 326*n*, 332*n*
 Berkeley, Sir Thomas 55
 Blackfriars, London 9
 Blakemore Evans, G. xvi, 83, 460
 Blount, Charles 130*n*
 Boaden, James 50
 Boccaccio, Giovanni, Decameron 373*n*
 Book of Common Prayer 192*n*, 228*n*, 230*n*, 246*n*, 256*n*, 258*n*, 320*n*, 328*n*, 342*n*, 386*n*, 414*n*, 446*n*, 449*n*
 Booth, Stephen xvi, 82, 96-7, 103, 134*n*, 142*n*, 144*n*, 146*n*, 172*n*, 178*n*, 191*n*, 198*n*, 212*n*, 242*n*, 248*n*, 260*n*, 265*n*, 274*n*, 278*n*, 288*n*, 314*n*, 324*n*, 326*n*, 328*n*, 330*n*, 335*n*, 340*n*, 342*n*, 352*n*, 358*n*, 366*n*, 368*n*, 370*n*, 372*n*, 374*n*, 376*n*, 378*n*, 380*n*, 382*n*, 384*n*, 386*n*, 388*n*, 396*n*, 398*n*, 400*n*, 403*n*, 406*n*, 414*n*, 416*n*, 418*n*, 426*n*
 Bradbrook, M.C. 282*n*
 Brawne, Fanny 51
Britannia's Pastorals 460, 462
 Brown, Henry 65
 Brown, Ivor, and Feavor, G. 272*n*
 Browne, William 462
 'Looves Labyrinth' 461
 Burbage, Richard 67-8
 Burghley, Lord 55
 Burrow, J.A.W., Ages of Man, The 120*n*, 124*n*
 Butler, Samuel 80, 396*n*
 Buxton 422*n*
- Cambridge 71
 Cameron, Alan 422*n*
 Campion, Edmund 27
 Capell, Edward 44, 103, 158*n*, 160*n*, 166*n*, 178*n*, 194*n*, 219*n*, 226*n*, 244*n*, 252*n*, 447*n*

- Carew, Thomas 453, 461
Rapture, A 388n
- Carey, Elizabeth 55
- Carey, Sir George (later Lord Hunsdon) 55, 462
- Carey, Horatio 455
- Carey, Lady 60
- Castiglione, Baldassare, Booke of the Courtier, The 296n
- Caxton, William, Jacobus de Cessolis: The Game of Chess 112n
- Cecil, Robert 4
- Chambers, E.K. 39, 52-3, 234n, 252n
- Channel 4 series of readings 84, 87
- Chapman, George 65, 282n
Conspiracie and Tragedie of Byron 36
Eastward Ho! (with Jonson and Marston) 36
Hero and Leander (with Marlowe) 282n
Ovids Banquet of Sence 396n, 442n
- Charles I, King 455
- Chaucer, Geoffrey
Knight's Tale, The 306n
Miller's Tale, The 424n
Troilus and Criseyde 400n
Wife of Bath's Prologue, The 112n, 382n
Wife of Bath's Tale 384n
- Cheapside Hoard 93
- Chedzoy, Kate 83-5
- Chettle, Henry 26
Englands Mourning Garment 24
- Cicero 112n
- Clarendon, Edward Hyde, Earl of 55, 58
- close reading techniques 83
- Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 77-8, 79, 80
- Colie, Rosalie 85, 101-2
- Collier, John Payne 7-8
- Condell, Henry 17, 60
- Congreve, William 43
- Conrad, Hermann 19
- context and allusion 45-69
- Corbett, Richard 453
- Cory, W.J. 66
- Coryate, Thomas, Coryates Crudities 86
- Cotton, Sir Robert 12n
- courtly love tradition 49, 50
- Craig, Alexander
Amorose Songes, Sonets and Elegies 30-1
Poeticall Essays, The 30
- criticism of sonnets 82-5
- Cunningham, Peter 7-8
- Daniel, Samuel 21, 34, 35, 46, 56, 65, 318n
Cleopatra 408n
Complaint of Rosamund, The 15, 44, 64, 89, 431n
Delia 15, 20, 44, 88-9, 262n, 270n, 322n
 'dark lady' identity of 50-5
 sonnets on 6, 47, 49, 80, 99-100, 368n, 388n
- dating xv, 1-28
- Davies, Sir John
Epigrammes 4
 'Gullinge Sonnets' 15, 264n
Nosce Teipsum 396n
- Davies, John, of Hereford 4, 65, 284n, 332n
Mirum in Modum 390n
Wittes Pilgrimage 29, 30, 65, 98
- Davison, Francis, Poetical Rhapsody, A 64-5, 461, 462
- Davison, Walter 65
- Davison, William 65
- dedications 31, 58-64, 66
 of 1609 Quarto 62, 109 of Jonson's Volpone 63
- Dekker, Thomas 26
Dead Tearme, The 10
Double PP, The 5
Ravens Almanacke, The 10
Wonderful Yeare, The 9
Worke for Armourous 10-11
- Delius, Nikolaus 336n
- Derby, William Stanley, Earl of 91
- Desportes, Philippe 21, 318n
- Dickenson, John 4, 348n
- Digges, Leonard 71-2
- Dobson, Eric 138n
- Doncaster, Viscount 67, 68
- Donne, John 4, 23, 70, 77
Anatomy of the World, An 220n
 'Canonization, The' 418n
Holy Sonnets 409n
 'Loves Growth' 340n
Second Anniversarie 432n
Songs and Sonnets 174n, 434n
Valediction, A: Of Weeping 172n
 'Will, The' 434n
- Donne, John, the younger 460
- Douglas, Lord Alfred 32
- Dover Wilson, J. 56
- Dowden, Edward 61

- Dowland, John, First Booke of Songes or Ayres 460, 461, 462
- Drayton, Michael 34, 35, 46, 65
 coat of arms 24, 26
Idea 14, 20, 23-6, 29, 30, 262*n*
Ideas Mirrour 14-15, 431*n*
Matilda the faire 91, 431*n*
Peirs Gaveston 91
- Drummond, William 35, 431*n*
Poems 31
- Dubrow, Heather 85
- Duncan-Jones, Katherine 218*n*, 236*n*, 348*n*
- 'Dunn, Dr' 67
- Dyer, Sir Edward 35
- Ecclesiastes 228*n*
- Edgar, Eleazar 3, 5
Edward the Third, The Reign of King 17, 298*n*
- Edwards, Richard 348*n*
- Edwards, Thomas, Narcissus 432*n*
- Eld, George xiv, 36, 37, 38, 40
- Elizabeth I, Queen 59, 65, 112*n*, 160*n*, 238*n*, 246*n*, 302*n*, 325*n*, 402*n*, 432*n* death of 9, 22, 23, 24, 324*n*, 358*n* and Essex 27-8, 242*n*, 362*n*
- Empson, William 83
Epigrammes and Elegies 4
- epigrams 101-2
- Erasmus, Desiderius 348*n*
- Essex, Robert Devereux, Earl of 23, 27-8, 53, 160*n*, 360*n*, 362*n*
- Everett, Barbara 334*n*
 'Mrs Shakespeare' 52
- Ewing, Thomas 306*n*
- Exodus, Book of 352*n*
- 'fair youth' sequence 10, 33, 48-9, 69, 92, 93, 95, 96, 100
- Fauconberg, Baron (Thomas Bellasys) 455
- Ferry, Anne 85
- Ficino, Marsilio 310*n*, 396*n*
- Field, Richard 29, 35, 36
- Fitton, Mary 22, 50, 53, 55
- Flatter, Richard 326*n*
- Fleet Prison 55
- Fletcher, Giles (elder) 46
Licia 422*n*
- Fletcher, John 42
- Florio, John 67, 150*n*
- Fowler, Alastair 98
- Foxe, John 364*n*
- Fracastoro, Girolamo 424*n*
- Fraunce, Abraham 162*n*
- Fripp, E.I. 422*n*
- Fuller, Thomas, Worthies of England 282*n*
- Garber, Marjorie 83
- Gascoigne, George 95-6
Adventures of Master F.J., The 158*n*
Steele Glas, The 116*n*, 158*n*
- Genesis, Book of 186*n*, 296*n*, 358*n*, 376*n*, 400*n*
- genitive titles 85-8
- Gerard, John, Herball 298*n*
- Gifford, Henry, For Soldiers 112*n*
- Gildon, Charles 101, 134*n*, 138*n*, 172*n*, 264*n*
- Globe Theatre, London 9, 140*n*
- Gonne, Maud 51
- Graziani, René 366*n*
- Greek Anthology, The* 422*n*
- Greene, Robert 108*n*, 112*n*
- Greville, Fulke
Alaham 452*n*
Caelica 14, 99
- Gunpowder Plot 27, 28, 360*n*
- Gurr, Andrew 28, 406*n*
- Hall, Joseph, Kings Prophecie, The. OR Weeping Ioy 23
- Hallam, Arthur 78
- Hallam, Henry 78
- Hanks, P., and Hodges, F. 343*n*
- Harington, Sir John 432*n*
- Harriot, Thomas 282*n*
- Harris, Frank 50, 51, 80
- Harrison, Stephen 356*n*
- Hart, William 57
- Harvey, Gabriel, Three Proper, and wittie Letters (with Spenser) 316*n*
- Hatfield House 432*n*
- Hathaway, Anne 52, 406*n*
- 'Hathaway, William' 52, 57
- Hay, James 29
- Hecht, Anthony 83
- Helen of Troy 216*n*, 217*n*
- Heminge, John 17, 60
- Henry, Prince 31, 457
- Henry V, King, tomb of 220*n*
- Henry VIII, King 238*n*, 256*n*
- Herbert family 29*n*, 56, 462
see also Pembroke

- Herbert, George 70-1
 'Pilgrimage, The' 402n
Temple, The 71
- Herford, C.H. and Simpson, Percy 370n
- Herrick, Robert 453, 461
- Heywood, Thomas 34-5, 42, 86
Apology for Actors, An 2-3, 334n
Oenone and Paris 422n
Troia Britannica 2
- Hicks, Sir Michael 58
- Hieatt, Kent 6, 18, 20
- Holland, Philemon 444n
- Homer, Seven Bookes of the Iliades
 (tr. Chapman) 282n
- homoeroticism xv, 32-4, 42, 50, 51-2, 67, 68, 70, 77, 79-82, 83, 91
- Honigmann, E.A.J. 12
- Hopper, Vincent C. 364n
- Horace 34, 144n, 238n, 240n
- Hoskyns, John 454
- Hotson, Leslie, 'Shakespeare's sonnets dated' 22
- 'Hughes, William' 57, 150n
- Hume, Captain Tobias, First Part of Ayres, The 266
- Hunsdon, 1st Lord 53, 435n, 455, 462
see also Carey, Sir George
- Hutton, James 426n
- immortalization through verse 34
- '*In laudem Musice et opprobrium
 Contemptorii eiusdem*' 457
- Ingram, W.G., and Redpath, Theodore xvi, 82, 134n, 158n, 198n, 202n, 248n,
 340n, 358n, 368n
- Inns of Court 71
- Isaiah, Book of 358n, 398n, 408n
- Jackson, MacD. P. 39, 162n
- Jaggard, William 1-6, 8-9, 34, 42, 334n, 453
- James I, King xv, 9, 160n, 168n, 284n, 454
 accession 22-3, 29, 238n, 324n coronation 23, 66
 and homoeroticism xv, 50, 67, 68 procession through City of London
 23, 24, 26, 27, 324n, 356n, 362n
Daemonologie 5
True Lawe of Free Monarchies, The 5
- Job, Book of 230n, 246n, 252n, 254n,
 368n
- 'John Barleycorn' 134n
- John, St, Gospel of 98, 226n, 426n
- Johnson, Samuel 75
- Jonson, Ben xiv, 26, 27, 38, 41, 60-4, 65, 66, 68, 69, 72, 262n, 272n, 282n, 352n,
 422n
Case is Altered, The 12n
Epigrammes 61, 282n, 422n
Every Man in his Humour 402n
Every Man Out of his Humour 370n
Hymenaei 36
Masques of Blackness and of Beauty 36
Poetaster, The 431n
Sejanus his Fall 36, 37, 61
Volpone 36, 37, 60-1, 63, 214n
see also Chapman, George
- Jowett, Benjamin 78-9
- Keats, John 51
- Kerrigan, John xv-xvi, 23, 37n, 40, 45,
 82, 103, 365n, 435n, 455
- King's Men 9, 55
- King's Virginia Company 58
- Kingsley, Ben 87
- Knight, G. Wilson 80
- Labinus 422n
- Labouchère amendment 32
- Lactantius, De Ave Phoenice 148n
- Lanier, Emilia 50, 53
- Lapotaire, Jane 84
- Lawes, Henry 459-60
- Lee, Sir Sidney 3-4, 17-18, 32n, 33, 36,
 38, 39, 46-7, 82, 91, 318n, 364n
- Leicester, Earl of 404n
- Leishman, J.B., Themes and Variations in Shakespeare's Sonnets 83, 220n
- Lennard, John 366n
- Lennox, Duke of 67
- Lettsom, W.N. 348n
- Leviticus, Book of 445n
- Linthicum, M. Channing 432n, 433n
- Lintott, Bernard 43, 44, 364n
- Lodge, Thomas 46
Complaint of Elstred 91, 431n
Phyllis 91, 431n
- Lord Chamberlain's Men 435n
- Lucy, Sir Thomas xv
- Luke, St
Acts of the Apostles 376n
 Gospel of 352n
- Mabbe, James 72
- McKerrow, R.B. 248n
- Mahood, Molly 85

- Maids of Honour 53, 55
 Malachi 200n
 males as addressees of sonnets 33-4, 42, 43-4, 46-50
see also homoeroticism
 Malone, Edmund xvi, 43, 44, 88, 103,
 134n, 202n, 240n, 278n, 294n, 306n,
 330n, 334n, 336n, 406n, 414n, 420n
 drawing 76
Supplement to Johnson's Shakespeare
 75
 Marianus Scholasticus 422n
 Mark, St, Gospel of 132n, 254n
 Marlowe, Christopher 4-5, 18, 51, 282n
Dido, Queen of Carthage (with Nashe)
 306n
Doctor Faustus 216n, 366n, 402n
Edward II 404n
Hero and Leander 126n, 222n, 278n,
 282n, 386n
Jew of Malta, The 214n
 'Passionate Shepherd, The' 138n
Poems 278n, 386n
Tamburlaine the Great 200n
 Marston, John
Scourge of Villanie, The 15, 370n
Sophonisba: The Wonder of Women 5
What You Will 36
see also Chapman, George Martial, Epigrams 422n
 martyrdom 27
 Marvell, Andrew, 'The Picture of little
 T.C. in a Prospect of Flowers' 116n
 Mary I, Queen 358n
 Mary, Queen of Scots 65, 360n
 Massey, Gerald 47, 51, 370n
 Matthew, St, Gospel of 114n, 178n,
 298n, 302n, 332n, 348n, 352n, 444n
 Maxwell, J.C. 408n
 menstrual cycle 48-9, 99
 Meres, Francis, Palladis Tamia 1, 2, 3, 6,
 13, 16, 47, 56, 101, 102, 144n, 453
 Michelangelo Buonarroti, 'Night' 164n
 Middleton, Thomas, Mad World, My Masters, A 5
 Milton, John 70, 74
Arcades 460
Areopagitica 447n
Comus 460
Mirror for Magistrates, A 89, 116n misogyny 48-9, 50, 454
 Montgomery, Philip Herbert, Earl of 29
 Moore, R. 457
 Morgan, Paul 72
 Morley, George 454-5
 'On the death of King James' 454
 Moryson, Fynes 348n
 Murray, David
Caelia, containing certaine Sonets 31
Sophonisba 31
 Murray, Peter xiv
 Musaeus 282n, 457
 Nashe, Thomas
 'Choise of Valentines, The' 448n
Christs Teares over Jerusalem 60
Summers Last Will and Testament
 134n, 304n
see also Marlowe
 Naunton, Robert, Fragmenta Regalia 435n
 Neoplatonism 296n
 New Criticism 83
 Newman, Thomas 85
 'News from Heaven and Hell' 404n
 Nicholson, Brinsley 134n
 Noot, J. van der, Theatre for Worldlings
 166n
 Nottingham, Charles Howard, Earl of 55
 Nowotny, Winifred 85
 Numbers, Book of 283n, 358n numerological structure 98-101
 'On an olde woeman' 454
 'On his Mistris Beauty' 457 order of sequence 16, 101
 Ormond, Richard, et al., Armada 270n
 Ovid 1, 2, 151n, 396n
Amores 4-5
Elegies 4
Fasti 302n
Metamorphoses 164n, 228n, 230n,
 256n, 314n
 Owen, John 31
 Oxford 71
 Bodleian Library 58
 Magdalen College 72
 Oxford, Earl of 14, 55
 Parkinson, John 218n
 'Parliament fart, The' 454-5
 Parnassus Plays 71
 Partridge, A.C. 41
 Partridge, Eric, Shakespeare's Bawdy
 118n, 190n, 194n, 222n, 426n, 451n
 Passe, Simon van de, portrait of 3rd Earl of Pembroke 54

- Passionate Pilgrim, The* 1-6, 8, 13, 36, 42, 44, 47, 218n, 334n, 390n, 402n, 462
 Paul, St
 1st Epistle to the Corinthians 116n, 382n, 409n
 2nd Epistle to the Corinthians 292n, 332n
 Epistle to the Romans 298n
 Peacham, Henry 31
 Peck, D.C. 404n
 Pembroke, Mary Herbert, Countess of 56, 66, 89, 91, 116n
 Pembroke, Philip Herbert, 4th Earl of 53, 60
 Pembroke, William Herbert, 3rd Earl of xv, 22, 33, 50, 53, 54, 55-69, 85, 116n, 266n, 324n, 459-60, 462
 Pembroke's Men 17
 Pepys, Samuel 74, 118n
 Pequinney, Joseph, Such Is My Love 81
 Perez, Antonio 142n
 Petrarch (Francesco Petrarca) 29, 31, 46, 47, 49, 50, 138n, 164n, 166n, 380n, 392n, 394n
 Canzoniere and Trionfi 88n
 Phillips, Edward, Perswasive Letter to his Mistress, A 74
 Philo Judaeus 364n
 plague outbreaks 8-11, 12, 13, 23, 30, 37, 57
 Plato 216n, 310n
 Platonic Great Year 228n
 Pléiade movement 34, 88n
 Pliny, Historie of the Worlde, The (tr. Holland) 444n
 Plumptre, E.H. 422n
Poems, Written by the... Earl of Pembroke 374n
 Poole, Joshua 74
 Pooler, C. Knox 44-5, 83, 280n, 314n, 340n, 406n
 Pope, Alexander, Rape of the Lock, The xiv Priapus 142n
 printing defects 38-9
 Proudfoot, Richard 299n
 Psalms, Book of 146n, 172n, 272n, 292n, 332n, 372n, 388n, 400n, 408n
 publishing history 29-45
 Puttenham, George 35
 Pygmalion 151n
 pyramids 22, 26, 70
 triumphal arch with, Cheapside, London 25
 Pythagoras 228n
 Quarto (1609) 104
 Raleigh, Sir Walter 35, 138n, 282n reception of sonnets 69-81 religious themes 49, 98
 Revelation, Book of 242n, 362n, 364n, 398n revision 13-17, 19
 rhyme scheme 96
 Rich, Penelope 142n
 'rival poet' 65-6, 270n, 282n
 Robbins, R.H. 460n
 Roche, T.P. 88n, 97-8, 101
 Rollins, H.E. xvi, 3-4, 7, 19, 38, 52, 73, 83, 134n, 138n, 150n, 160n, 172n, 202n, 264n, 326n, 334n, 348n, 364n, 370n, 374n, 420n
Romance of the Rose, The 112n
 Rome, Egyptian obelisks in 22
 Ronsard, Pierre de 21, 318n
 Sonnets pour Hélène 14
 Ross, George 420n
 Rossetti, Christina, 'Remember' 252n
 Rowlands, Samuel 31
 Letting of Humours Blood, The 404n
 Rowse, A.L. 50, 51-2, 53
 Shakespeare's Sonnets: The Problems Solved 50
 Rudyerd, Benjamin 68
 Russell, Thomas 72

 Sarrazin, Gregor 19, 410n, 422n
 Scaramelli, Giovanni 66-7
 Schaar, Claes 19
 Schoenbaum, Samuel 4, 33, 52, 246n, 252n, 282n
 School of Night 282n
 Sedgwick, Eve 83
 self-quotation 17-18
 Sewell, George 103, 202n
 Shakespeare, Edmund (WS's brother) 252n
 Shakespeare, Mary (WS's mother) 12
 Shakespeare, William burial 272n
 coat of arms 24, 26
 references to sonnets in plays 45-6
 All's Well that Ends Well 45, 102, 118n, 192n, 202n, 342n, 348n, 442n
 Antony and Cleopatra 102, 116n, 164n, 217n, 236n, 252n, 270n, 284n, 300n, 314n, 324n, 356n, 372n, 416n, 426n, 433n

- As You Like It* 18, 42, 46, 48, 140n,
 144n, 170n, 226n, 234n, 258n, 272n,
 282n, 284n, 320n, 368n, 374n, 400n,
 439n
Comedy of Errors, The 217n
Coriolanus 342n, 374n, 436n, 438n
Cymbeline 18, 112n, 146n, 160n, 168n,
 192n, 196n, 248n, 310n, 374n, 386n,
 388n, 392n, 396n, 422n, 436n, 442n,
 444n, 448n
Hamlet 46, 134n, 144n, 172n, 176n,
 182n, 194n, 202n, 210n, 228n, 232n,
 234n, 236n, 242n, 248n, 250n, 300n,
 320n, 324n, 326n, 328n, 330n, 332n,
 340n, 346n, 354n, 356n, 358n, 366n,
 386n, 402n, 406n, 426n, 431n, 449n,
 450n, 451n, 452n
Henry IV, Part 1 178n, 188n, 192n,
 198n, 210n, 214n, 220n, 306n, 310n,
 342n, 366n, 374n, 386n, 418n
Henry IV, Part 2 151n, 160n, 192n,
 208n, 242n, 264n, 288n, 324n, 326n,
 334n, 352n, 354n
Henry V 17, 45-6, 160n, 166n, 192n,
 202n, 212n, 226n, 284n, 296n, 328n,
 368n, 402n, 439n, 450n
Henry VI, Part 1 55, 276n, 410n, 420n
Henry VI, Part 2 55, 64, 160n, 192n,
 252n, 302n, 324n, 348n, 354n, 390n
Henry VI, Part 3 112n, 362n, 390n,
 392n
Julius Caesar 61, 158n, 180n, 220n,
 412n
King John 168n, 180n, 208n, 220n,
 334n, 398n, 418n, 420n, 424n
King Lear 32, 101, 124n, 140n, 184n,
 190n, 220n, 234n, 242n, 258n, 272n,
 278n, 280n, 286n, 292n, 343n, 344n,
 358n, 372n, 373n, 388n, 396n, 408n,
 432n
Lover's Complaint, A xv-xvi, 10, 13, 18,
 19-20, 35, 38, 42, 44, 47, 73, 86-8,
 90, 92-5, 98, 190n, 300n, 356n, 426n
Love's Labour's Lost 1, 6, 45, 124n,
 144n, 152n, 218n, 224n, 266n, 276n,
 354n, 378n, 410n, 420n, 434n, 444n
Macbeth 150n, 160n, 196n, 198n,
 258n, 260n, 290n, 306n, 336n, 402n
Measure for Measure 17, 116n, 192n,
 204n, 250n, 280n, 300n, 356n, 386n,
 394n, 396n, 398n, 416n, 439n, 441n
Merchant of Venice, The 126n, 172n,
 174n, 246n, 252n, 296n, 433n
Merry Wives of Windsor, The 46, 402n,
 418n
Midsummer Night's Dream, A 55,
 152n, 196n, 208n, 236n, 288n, 302n,
 363n, 370n, 406n, 416n, 418n
Much Ado about Nothing 45, 132n,
 242n, 306n, 396n, 443n, 444n
Othello 122n, 130n, 150n, 170n, 174n,
 192, 222n, 242n, 258n, 284n, 286n,
 296n, 300n, 306n, 328n, 332n, 338n,
 342n, 348n, 365n, 368n, 370n, 376n,
 380n, 386n, 388n, 390n, 394n, 398n,
 402n, 416n, 420n, 426n, 447n, 448n
Pericles 55, 68, 242n, 270n, 440n
Phoenix and the Turtle, The 42, 44,
 138n, 312n, 382n
Rape of Lucrece, The 1, 8, 12, 34,
 89-91, 132n, 148n, 158n, 160n,
 178n, 180n, 188n, 198n, 206n, 222n,
 264n, 274n, 302n, 316n, 372n, 374n,
 396n, 406n, 435n, 442n, 448n
Richard II 56, 112n, 160n, 162n, 180n,
 304n, 308n, 334n, 386n, 392n, 410n
Richard III 116n, 152n, 180n, 238n,
 270n, 334n, 352n
Romeo and Juliet 113n, 210n, 224n,
 318n, 356n, 362n, 372n, 376n, 386n,
 392n, 394n, 396n, 398n, 418n, 432n
Taming of the Shrew, The 7, 166n,
 374n, 416n
Tempest, The 283n, 324n, 332n, 334n,
 418n, 434n
Timon of Athens 18, 102, 324n, 359n,
 402n, 424n, 437n, 450n
Titus Andronicus 162n, 164n, 172n,
 192n, 228n, 306n, 372n
Troilus and Cressida 8, 102, 206n,
 216n, 236n, 272n, 348n, 394n, 420n,
 432n, 436n, 439n
Twelfth Night 148n, 152n, 192n, 217n,
 228n, 283n, 298n, 330n, 354n, 384n,
 432n
Two Gentlemen of Verona 45, 274n,
 296n, 314n, 350n, 358n, 386n, 414n
Venus and Adonis 1, 3, 4, 8, 12, 34, 71,
 113n, 138n, 170n, 192n, 200n, 206n,
 216n, 222n, 236n, 258n, 264n, 276n,
 284n, 298n, 300n, 308n, 334n, 363n,
 374n, 390n, 398n, 400n, 402n, 412n,
 418n, 422n, 446n, 448n
Winter's Tale, The 124n, 132n, 160n,
 242n, 300n, 306n, 312n, 314n, 390n,
 400n

- Shaw, Bernard 51
 Shrewsbury, Countess of 91
 Sidney, Sir Philip 35, 46, 58, 174*n*, 264*n*, 438*n*
 Arcadia 57, 120*n*, 378*n*
 Astrophil and Stella 29, 46, 48, 50, 56, 85, 99, 101, 124*n*, 138*n*, 152*n*, 156*n*, 166*n*, 186*n*, 194*n*, 200*n*, 204*n*, 210*n*, 212*n*, 219*n*, 222*n*, 228*n*, 276*n*, 278*n*, 280*n*, 284*n*, 300*n*, 304*n*, 306*n*, 310*n*, 326*n*, 368*n*, 374*n*, 376*n*, 380*n*, 388*n*, 394*n*, 398*n*, 414*n*, 424*n*, 451*n*
 Certain Sonnets 326*n*, 446*n*
 Lady of May, The 414*n*
 'Letter to Queen Elizabeth' 124*n*
 'My true love hath my heart and I have his' 154*n*
 New Arcadia 120*n*, 126*n*, 144*n*, 162*n*, 188*n*, 312*n*, 316*n*, 358*n*, 420*n*, 433*n*, 437*n*, 438*n*, 443*n*
 Old Arcadia 57, 256*n*, 312*n*, 314*n*, 346*n*, 348*n*, 356*n*, 378*n*, 400*n*, 410*n*, 437*n*
 Prose 326*n*
 Sidney, Robert 14, 55
 Simon of Cyrene 178*n*, 194*n*
 Sisson, C.J. 134*n*, 222*n*, 322*n*
 Sixtus V, Pope 22
 Slater, Eliot 19
 Smith, William 4
 Song of Solomon 132*n*, 426*n*
 Sonnet 8, transcriptions 458, 459 sonnets and sonnet sequences 13-17
 Southampton, Henry Wriothesley, Earl of xv, 19, 22, 33, 52-3, 160*n*, 216*n*, 324*n*
 Spain
 Armada 22
 treaty with 24
 Spenser, Edmund 35
 Amoretti 204*n*, 376*n*, 414*n*
 Epithalamion 144*n*
 Faerie Queene, The 230*n*, 250*n*, 316*n*, 398*n*, 441*n*
 Mother Hubberds Tale 436*n*
 Ruines of Time 220*n*
 Shepherd's Calendar 310*n*
 Shorter Poems 310*n*, 436*n*
 (tr.) Theatre for Worldlings 166*n*
 Three Proper, and wittie Letters (with Harvey) 316*n*
 'Spes Altera' 455, 457
 Spurling, Hilary (ed.), Elinor Fettiplace's Receipt Book 120*n*
 Stationers' Register 3, 5, 6-7, 11, 12, 13, 29*n*, 36, 58, 85
 Steevens, George 44, 75, 103, 334*n*, 422*n*
 drawing 76
 Stratford-upon-Avon 11, 59
 Court of Record 12
 Grammar School 40
 Holy Trinity Church 272*n*
 Strode, William 453 structure of sequence 97-102
 of sonnet 95-7
 Stuart family 30
 style 17-21
 Suckling, Sir John 461
 Brennoralt 72-4
 Surrey, Henry Howard, Earl of 35
 Swift, Jonathan 374*n*

 Taylor, Archer 414*n*
 Taylor, Gary 453-6, 461
 Tennyson, Alfred Lord 78-9
 In Memoriam 21, 78, 318*n*
 Terence 348*n*
 theatres, London, closures 8-10, 12, 57
 Theobald, Lewis 103, 160*n*
 Thompson, Emma 78
 Thorpe, Thomas 7, 11-12, 13, 31, 33, 36-7, 40, 47, 52, 56, 57, 58-61, 66, 74, 91, 108, 108*n*, 112*n*, 282*n*
 Tilley, Morris Palmer, Dictionary of the Proverbs in England..., A 124*n*, 150*n*, 152*n*, 156*n*, 176*n*, 178*n*, 180*n*, 184*n*, 192*n*, 206*n*, 218*n*, 220*n*, 232*n*, 240*n*, 246*n*, 250*n*, 256*n*, 284*n*, 298*n*, 300*n*, 306*n*, 314*n*, 320, 334*n*, 342*n*, 348*n*, 352*n*, 359*n*, 362*n*, 366*n*, 372*n*, 376*n*, 384*n*, 386*n*, 388*n*, 400*n*, 404*n*, 410*n*, 412*n*, 420*n*, 448*n*
 Tillotson, Kathleen 15, 16 time-schemes 21
 title page 107
 title of sequence xvi, 3, 7, 85-8
 'To one that would dye a maid' 454
 topical allusions 21
 Tourneur, Cyril, Funerall Poem... Upon Sir Francis Vere, A 5
 Trinity 49
 Tucker, T.G. 334*n*, 386*n*
 Tyler, Thomas 47, 51, 53
 Tyndale, William 452*n*
 Tyrwhitt, Thomas 322*n*

- ULYSSES upon Ajax* 310n
- Vauquelin de la Fresnaie, Jean 21, 318n
- Vega, Lope de, Rimas 71-2
- Vendler, Helen 85, 408n
- venereal disease 100
- Vere, Bridget 55
- Virgil, Aeneid 455
- Walsingham, Sir Francis 65
- Watson, Thomas 75
Hekatompathia 14
- Weever, John 2
- West, Richard 31
- 'W.H., Mr.', identity of 52-64, 66-9,
108n, 266n, 282n
- Whyte, Rowland 55
- Wilde, Oscar xiv, 79-80, 85, 134n, 150n
letter to Lord Alfred Douglas 32
Portrait of Master W.H., The 32
'Portrait of Mr. W.H., The' 79 trial of 32-3
- Wiles, David 55
- Wilson, Emily 422n
- Wisdom of Solomon 170n
- words, rare 16, 18, 20
- Wordsworth, William 75-7
- Wright, John 37
- Wyatt, Sir Thomas 35
'My lute awake' 118n
'Whoso list to hunt' 400n
- Wyndham, George 40
- Yeats, W.B. 51
Yorkshire Tragedy, A 402n

FIRST LINE INDEX

A woman's face with nature's own hand painted	151
Accuse me thus: that I have scanted all	345
Against my love shall be as I am now	237
Against that time, if ever that time come	209
Ah, wherefore with infection should he live	245
Alack, what poverty my Muse brings forth	317
Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there	331
As a decrepit father takes delight	185
As an unperfect actor on the stage	157
As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st	133
Be wise as thou art cruel, do not press	395
Being your slave, what should I do but tend	225
Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan	381
Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took	205
But be contented when that fell arrest	259
But do thy worst to steal thyself away	295
But wherefore do not you a mightier way	143
Canst thou, O cruel, say I love thee not	415
Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep	423
Devouring time, blunt thou the lion's paws	149
Farewell, thou art too dear for my possessing	285
For shame deny that thou bear'st love to any	131
From fairest creatures we desire increase	113
From off a hill whose concave womb reworded	431
From you I have been absent in the spring	307
Full many a glorious morning have I seen	177
How can I then return in happy plight	167

How can my Muse want subject to invent	187
How careful was I, when I took my way	207
How heavy do I journey on the way	211
How like a winter hath mine absence been	305
How oft when thou, my music, music play'st	371
How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame	301
I grant thou wert not married to my Muse	275
I never saw that you did painting need	277
If my dear love were but the child of state	359
If the dull substance of my flesh were thought	199
If there be nothing new, but that which is	229
If thou survive my well-contented day	175
If thy soul check thee that I come so near	387
In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes	397
In loving thee thou knowst I am forsworn	421
In the old age black was not counted fair	369
Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye	129
Is it thy will thy image should keep open	233
Let me confess that we two must be twain	183
Let me not to the marriage of true minds	343
Let not my love be called idolatry	321
Let those who are in favour with their stars	161
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore	231
Like as, to make our appetites more keen	347
Lo, as a careful housewife runs to catch	401
Lo, in the Orient when the gracious light	125
Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest	117
Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage	163
Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate	399
Love is too young to know what conscience is	419
Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war	203
Mine eye hath played the painter, and hath steeled	159
Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly	127
My glass shall not persuade me I am old	155
My love is as a fever, longing still	411
My love is strengthened, though more weak in seeming	315
My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun	375
My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still	281
No longer mourn for me when I am dead	253
No more be grieved at that which thou hast done	181
No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change	357
Not from the stars do I my judgement pluck	139
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments	221
Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul	325
O call not me to justify the wrong	393

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide	333
O from what power hast thou this powerful might	417
O how I faint when I of you do write	271
O how much more doth beauty beauteous seem	219
O how thy worth with manners may I sing	189
O, lest the world should task you to recite	255
O me! What eyes hath love put in my head	413
O never say that I was false of heart	329
O that you were yourself! But, love, you are	137
O thou my lovely Boy, who in thy power	365
O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends	313
Or I shall live, your epitaph to make	273
Or whether doth my mind, being crowned with you	339
Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth	409
Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault	289
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day	147
Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye	235
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea	241
Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind	337
So am I as the rich, whose blessed key	215
So are you to my thoughts as food to life	261
So is it not with me as with that Muse	153
So now I have confessed that he is thine	383
So oft have I invoked thee for my Muse	267
So shall I live, supposing thou art true	297
Some glory in their birth, some in their skill	293
Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness	303
Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said	223
Take all my loves, my love; yea, take them all	191
That god forbid, that made me first your slave	227
That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect	251
That thou hast her it is not all my grief	195
That time of year thou mayst in me behold	257
That you were once unkind befriends me now	351
Th'expense of spirit in a waste of shame	373
The forward violet thus did I chide	309
The little love-god lying once asleep	427
The other two, slight air, and purging fire	201
Then hate me when thou wilt, if ever, now	291
Then let not winter's ragged hand deface	123
They that have power to hurt, and will do none	299
Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me	379
Those hours that with gentle work did frame	121
Those lines that I before have writ do lie	341
Those lips that love's own hand did make	407

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view	249
Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits	193
Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art	377
Thou blind fool love, what dost thou to mine eyes	389
Thus can my love excuse the slow offence	213
Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn	247
Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts	173
Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain	355
Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear	265
Tired with all these, for restful death I cry	243
'Tis better to be vile than vile esteemed	353
To me, fair friend, you never can be old	319
Two loves I have, of comfort and despair	403
Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend	119
Was it the proud full sail of his great verse	283
Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed	165
Were't ought to me I bore the canopy	363
What is your substance, whereof are you made	217
What potions have I drunk of siren tears	349
What's in the brain that ink may character	327
When forty winters shall besiege thy brow	115
When I consider everything that grows	141
When I do count the clock that tells the time	135
When I have seen by time's fell hand defaced	239
When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes	169
When in the chronicle of wasted time	323
When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see	197
When my love swears that she is made of truth	391
When thou shalt be disposed to set me light	287
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought	171
Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long	311
Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid	269
Who is it that says most? Which can say more	279
Who will believe my verse in time to come	145
Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will	385
Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day	179
Why is my verse so barren of new pride	263
Your love and pity doth th'impression fill	335